Beacom Family Chiropractic — Family-Focused, Community-Driven

Beacom Family Chiropractic. A fixture in the Whitehall area since 2000, BFC—as it’s affectionately come to be known—has developed a well-earned reputation for providing exceptional and life-changing care.

“Each staff member is concerned for your total health and getting you to the next level of healing,” Mary V. explains. “Each one is always learning and researching and studying ways to get you on your healing path. Their practice has helped me move to a new journey of living pain-free.”

Gabe F. echoes her sentiments. “[It’s a] Life changing experience that has put my family on a road to better understanding of how to best take care of our bodies.”

If the word family jumps out as a unique descriptor for a doctors’ office, there’s a reason for that: Beacom Family Chiropractic thrives on making children and families center stage.

“I’ve seen babies from a day old to patients who are as old as ninety-seven,” Dr. Brent Beacom explains. “The average age of somebody in the U.S. seeing a chiropractor for the first time is forty-five years old. Imagine if you didn’t see a dentist until you were forty-five years old. How would your teeth be? One of the things I’ve told my patients over the years is that it’s a lot easier for us as chiropractors to help manage the development of a young spine as it grows, rather than wait until we’re adults with problems that’ve been in place for twenty, thirty, or forty years before we try to work on them.”

Dr. Helena shares this viewpoint. “Sometimes the way the spine and skull develop can interfere with the brain and nervous system, and this is something we’re very passionate about correcting.”

She explains that their care focus is more than simply adjusting spines to relieve pain; their goal is to help their patients manage life as a whole. “There are three types of stress: emotional stress, physical stress, such as trauma and accidents, and chemical stress, which is becoming more and more of an issue in our environment. Chiropractic not only takes the pressure of stuck bones off the nervous system so it can function properly, but a nervous system that can do its job helps the body rebalance itself so we can better deal with these stressors in a healthier way.”

“If a bone in the spine is misaligned or stuck, it can put pressure on the spinal cord or nerve,” Dr. Brent agrees. “Our job as chiropractors is to remove that pressure. When we do that, people will generally feel, and function, better.”

So why is Beacom Family Chiropractic so focused on helping people manage life when other offices are only concerned with general pain relief?

“Our motto is ‘Healthier people, healthier planet.’” Dr. Helena explains. Healthier people tend to have a more positive outlook on life, and they’re more inclined to try to make a difference.”

“When you make positive changes in your own life, that influences those around you,” Dr. Brent adds. “Then the people around you make changes, which in turn influences more people, and that’s how change spreads out into the world. Every day we see and treat blue collar workers, teenagers, athletes, babies... Our goal is to help and serve people. That’s how we, as an office, can provide a positive influence on our community.”

For over two decades, Beacom Family Chiropractic has been giving back to their community and supporting families through various fundraising efforts near and dear to its heart. The office currently hosts three annual events dedicated to supporting their local food pantry, animal shelters and their newest goal: a well project to bring clean drinking water to communities in Nigeria. The BFC motto of Healthier people, healthier planet may provide chiropractic care locally, but its positive impact is felt world-wide. And that is the true meaning of family focused.
