ANSWERS FOR ALL YOUR WOES

'TWEEN 12 AND 20

ROBERT WALLACE

My Little Sister Clings to Me for Everything

DR. WALLACE: I'm a busy 17-year-old junior female high school student and I have two younger siblings, a 13-year-old sister and an 11-year-old brother. My little brother is a joy. He's very funny and very much a team player with everyone in the family. He keeps us constantly amused with his antics, but he never gets into any real trouble. My mom and I think that he's going to grow to be a comedian someday.

But my little sister has quite the opposite personality. She's very clingy and needy, and she can't seem to make any sort of decision without consulting me first. For example, she won't go shopping for clothes or shoes with our mother unless I attend the shopping trip with her. She constantly asks me about what clothes to wear, how to act and what classes she should take in school. And of course, she wants to learn all she can about dating and socializing, so she's constantly quizzing me about that topic as well.

I love her, so I don't mind spending time with her, but I'm worried that once I go away to college in two years she'll be lost without my guidance! It's not that I know anything more than anyone else, but I guess she leans on me so much because I'm four years older than she is and I have much more experience in many areas of life.

How can I get her weaned off me within the next year or so? I'd like to be able to go off to my preferred college in the next state from here with a clear conscience. — She Leans on Me for Everything, via email

SHE LEANS ON ME FOR EVERYTHING: It's natural for a younger sister to consult with an older sister about many things in life, particularly clothing, fashion and makeup. But your case does sound a bit extreme compared to the usual stories I've heard over the years.

I suggest that in the next year you praise her for her progress in many areas, and tell her that if she truly wants to be like you are, she needs to slowly but surely begin paving her own road in life, the way you did. Explain that you had no older sister to help you, so you've forged ahead the best you could, and things turned out well for you. Then tell her she has the advantage of all of your insights and coaching, and she's more than well prepared to begin making her own decisions and finding her own way in life.

The good news is she's 13 now and will be nearly 15 or so by the time you head off to college. There is usually a big difference in the level of maturity in teenage girls between the ages of 13 and 15, so I trust your sister will be much more mentally prepared as that time approaches, especially given the outstanding counseling and guidance you will continue to provide her until then.

I Think All of The 'Age Rules' Are Stupid

DR. WALLACE: What's so magical about turning any particular age? I think our society is crazy to say that a young person who is 20 years, 364 days old can't drink or purchase alcohol, but magically, on the very next day they can buy as much or drink as much as they would like.

The same goes for purchasing cigarettes, and also for 18-year-olds who can magically vote in elections. Why does our country do this? Everyone knows nothing magical happens overnight between the day before turning a "magical age" and the day the "magical age" actually arrives.

I think this is dumb and makes our country and the people making all the laws look stupid and ignorant. Do you agree that nothing special happens after waking up from a night's sleep to turn a big,

It's natural for a younger sister to consult with an older sister about many things in life.

"special" age? Something tells me that you won't agree with me, however. — I Don't Get It, via email

I DON'T GET IT: You may be surprised for me to tell you that I agree with you, at least partially. I agree that nothing special happens overnight before a teen turns 18 on the nose or a young adult turns exactly 21 to the day. But from there, we will have to agree to disagree.

The reason our society does this is because we have to make a general rule that can be applied to everybody equally based upon a specific biological age. In reality, some 17-year-olds are mature enough and informed enough to vote, and some 22-year-olds should be nowhere near alcohol, but it's impossible for our society to make individual judgment calls on each of the millions of people who turn 18 and 21 in our nation each year.

ADVICE

ANSWERS FOR ALL YOUR WOES

DEAR ANNIE
ANNIE LANE

Dear Annie: I suspect my son may be gay. He is a gorgeous, smart, successful young man in his mid-20s, who has really never shown interest in girls. I am perfectly fine with him being gay, and I hope he would realize that. I wish he would just tell me if that was the case. I'm really not sure if he is because he seems very masculine. But so did Rock Hudson.

I would love your gay readers' opinions. Do they wish their parents would have brought up the subject or just let them come out when they were ready? Is there a good way to ease into the topic? I would hate for him to feel the need to hide it from me for whatever reason. Maybe I've said stupid gay remarks in the past? ("Oh, that's so gay," or whatever.) I might have, but I can't remember specifically. I am very ashamed of myself if I did.

Is that the reason he feels he can't open up to me? Or maybe I'm just totally wrong about everything? Is it normal for a man in his mid-20s to show no interest in girls and not be gay? I feel like I have a lot to learn! — Loving Mom

Dear Loving Mom: As more people have come out of the closet as gay, you should know that you are not alone in asking these questions. I welcome my readers to write in with suggestions for this mother and answers to her questions.

Dear Annie: I own a seafood retail business, and we have a customer every Sunday who is hearing impaired and a little slow at the same time. She is very nice and spends a good amount of money every week. Our issue is that we are very busy on Sundays with long lines, and she will take up 15 to 20 minutes of one of my worker's time while other people are in line behind her.

After she finally chooses what she wants, she will then stand and start talking about other topics. We have tried asking the next customer in line what we can help them with, but she will still stand there and continue to talk while being in the way. We don't want to hurt her feelings, but other customers behind her get agitated waiting for her and don't understand that she is a little slow.

Our employees have tried telling her that they have to help the next customer, but that doesn't work either. Any suggestions on how to possibly rectify the situation? — Confused on What to Do

Dear Confused: This is a tough one. Since this happens every week, you have time to experiment and come up with a game plan. For starters, you might think about assigning one employee to come around from behind the counter and gently lead her away from the line. The employee can have a short conversation, make her feel special and thank her for buying the seafood.

If that doesn't work, you might consider having a coffee with her and explaining the problem from your perspective, all the while telling her how much you like her and appreciate her business. She is lonely and will look to you as a friend, and, hopefully, be more sensitive of the other customers. Another approach would be to put up balloons and a welcome sign one week, letting her know how important she is, and giving you permission to be firm in moving her out of the other customers' way.

Not just fun & games

SUX Pride to celebrate LGBTQ community with greater emphasis on education

BY EARL HORLYK

Which of the following statements are true?

1. Characterized by parades, drag shows and campy entertainment, LGBTQ Pride events are fun, positive activities that designed to increase the visibility and acceptance of people in the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender queer communities.

2. Born after decades of homophobia which culminated in 1969's Stonewall Riots, LGBTQ Pride events are educational and, at times, political by design. Modern-day Pride activities wouldn't have earned widespread acceptance if it wasn't for people who fought for gay liberation in the past.

If you answered both 1 and 2 are, in fact, true, congratulations, both are correct.

However, recent bills restricting LGBTQ rights in several states, the banning of some books containing LGBTQ subject matter and a possible ban of drag performances in certain areas have been on the increase.

Such battles are being fought in school boards and statehouses, as well as in the court of public opinion.

AN EXTRA DAY:

All of this worries Joe McCulley, who has been organizing SUX PRIDE – which is Siouxland's principal Pride event – since 2016.

"SUX Pride was based upon the simple value that love will always win," he said. "The event was founded to give queer people and their allies a space to come together and celebrate one another."

Over the past several years, the event has given drag performers, burlesque entertainers and all types of artists a safe space needed to showcase their talents.

In Sioux City, the normally two-day event – which begins with a "Pride of Fourth Street" night on June 2, a SUX Pride Diversity March, "Drag Queen Story Time," (partnering with the Sioux City Public Library), a Lip Sync Battle and a Drag Show fundraiser at the Sioux City Convention Center, 801 Fourth St., throughout June 3 – has expanded to a third day.

Hard Rock Hotel & Casino's Anthem venue will host SUX Pride's "Drag Me to Brunch" – a fundraiser for the Iowa Trans Mutual Aid Fund – starting at 11 a.m. June 4.

"We are so lucky that Hard Rock stepped up to the plate by helping us out," said McCulley, whose drag alter ego is "Martina Shakers." "Some other companies weren't so brave."

ACCEPTANCE, BACKLASH:

McCulley was referring to a local distributor of Anheuser-Bush, which is currently embroiled in controversy after Bud Light partnered with Dylan Mulvaney, a transgender influencer, on a beer can promotion.

"Anheuser-Bush had always been a sponsor for SUX Pride but, this year, they couldn't because of controversy," he said, shaking his head. "They say, 'Let things die down a bit.' Unfortunately, it reminds me of the bad old days."

A Sioux City native, McCulley struggles when coming to terms with his sexuality.

"I kept my homosexuality under wraps until I moved to Colorado as an adult," he recalled.

Even after returning to Sioux City, McCulley initially stayed in the closet.

"I was 30 before I could tell everyone I was gay," he said. "All of the people that mattered to me accepted who I was."

CREATING A NEW FAMILY:

Unfortunately, that wasn't the case for Valeo Khan-Snyder, a transgender clinical mental health counselor.

"I lost my biological family when I came out and spoke out as a transgender," said Khan-Snyder who goes by the name Leo. "I no longer have a relationship with my birth mother, but I've been able to find a mother willing to accepted as a I am."

As an openly queer and transgender social worker, Khan-Snyder is passionate about working with marginalized population while advocating for LGBTQ rights in the Iowa Statehouse.

EDUCATION IS KEY:

"You want acceptance," Khan-Snyder said. "Often times, education needs to come first."

Which is one of the first things to take note of at 2023's SUX Pride.

FESTIVAL FOR ALL AGES:

"While we have all of the things that people love about SUX Pride, we've made a concerted effort to incorporate as many educational or family-friendly activities as possible," McCulley said.

This included a dance for teenagers that will coincide with the adults-only drag show taking place at the Sioux City Convention Center, Saturday night.

That comes as a relief to Khan-Snyder, who often worked with teenagers who were questioning their identity.

Alessandra Mata always felt a bit different than other people.

"Growing up in family of brothers who loved sports, I was the one who loved theater and enjoyed singing," Mata, who is transgender and performs in drag under the name Alessandra Jacobs, explained.

Accepted by family members, Mata has worked as a mentor and role model to both young entertainers as well as for youth who are struggling with their sexuality.

HISTORY AT HARD ROCK:

At Hard Rock's "Drag Me to Brunch," Mata will become the only transwoman to ever produce and direct a show at the casino.

"Drag Me to Brunch" is also the first show that Hard Rock had ever hosted inside of their casino," Mata said with a smile. "I don't mean just in Sioux City. This is the first drag show at a Hard Rock casino, anywhere in the world."

"We're making a difference in little old Sioux City, baby," Mata added.

McCulley can't help but grin at Mata's enthusiasm.

But McCulley also admitted there were times when he couldn't go out in public with his "drag face."

"Over the years, I've become identified with 'Martina Shakers,'" he said. "Even when I'm not wearing a wig, people will come up and say, 'Hey, Martina.'"

CAN'T GO BACKWARD:

Still, McCulley worries about younger performers like Mata.

When I drive Alessandro back to her home after a show, I'll instinctively wait until she gets into a house before I leave," he said, somewhat glumly.

While he said the current political scene isn't necessarily a return to the "bad old days," McCulley prefers being safe than sorry.

"I work with local bars, restaurants, businesses, you name it," he said. "They want to be a part of SUX Pride because the LGBTQ population is part of the community."

Reflecting for a moment, McCulley continued: "We can't afford to go backward. Not now, not ever."

Rap, now with extra sauce!

Hip-hopper C-Note Bankin's show combines music with BBQ

BY EARL HORLYK

C-Note Bankin (aka Charles Franklin III) is what you call a "triple threat."

Not only can the Sioux City-based entertainer sing and rap, but he can also cook.

Specifically, down-home barbecue will be on the menu for "Sauce It Up!" an outdoor concert being held in the "backyard" of the Key Club, 1008 Fourth St., on Sunday.

In addition to C-Note Bankin, who is the Siouxland's Choice for 2023's Best Hip-Hop Artist, the show will also feature an all-star lineup rappers, like The Urban Outlaws and DJ Kid Corduroy.

"Come around for the food at 5 p.m., stick around for the show that follows immediately after that," he said.

C-Note learned all about music while growing up in Arkansas.

"My mom took me and my brothers to church," he said. "Like so many other people, we fell in love with performing at church."

Subsequently, his family formed an T&B singing group called Dynasty when C-Note Bankin was still in school.

"I was all about the music," he said. "If I wasn't singing with my brothers, I was in choirs or in school musicals."

As he got older, C-Note Bankin also began rapping.

"I love reading and I love the way that words sound together," he explained. "I discovered I could rap as well as I could sing."

C-Note Bankin acknowledged he was inspired by such hip-hop icons as Nipsey Hustle and Nas.

"Nas, especially, is a storyteller," he said. "(Nas) creates a world and lets you in it."

Which is exactly what C-Note Bankin wants to do with his music.

After all, he's already played (along with "Radio" Miller of MIL) at the Abe Stage during 2022's Saturday in the Park. He's even played on the same bill as R&B legend Ginuwine ("Pony," "Same Old G," "Differences") at an Aug. 2022 show at Hard Rock Hotel & Casino's Anthem.

If he wasn't already busy, C-Note Bankin also joined forces with the Sioux City-based Sarffy Hot Sauce Company for an All Day Hot Sauce, bearing his name and likeness.

"I love hot sauces but I wanted to create one that won't punish me," he explained. "I can use my All Day Hot Sauce in the morning with my eggs or for dinner with my steaks. You can use it all day, any day."

Suffice it to say, family also taught C-Note Bankin with everything he knows about food.

"It's pretty common to learn about smoking meats at a young age down south," he said. "The men in the family take care of the meat while the women are all about the sweet stuff."

Chances are good that "Sauce It Up" will have plenty of both.

Indeed, the always enterprising C-Note Banking has a new project just waiting on the backburner.

"I'm hoping to collaborate with a local chef on a new cookbook with nothing but soul food favorites," he said.

Well, we wouldn't put it past C-Note Bankin for creating a culinary conglomeration.

Down south, we know about good music and we know about good barbecue," he said. "It was only a matter of time before somebody found a way to combine both."
