QUESTION OF THE WEEK

What part of Sioux City is deserving of a cultural renaissance?

Jared McNett
Online editor/Reporter
mcnett@siouxcityjournal.com
"A renaissance for the stockyards would be pretty cool to see."

Earl Horlyk
Staff Writer
earl.horlyk@lee.net
"As a longtime near-northsider, I'd love to see one of Sioux City's first neighborhoods to get the respect it deserves."

Mason Dockter
Staff Writer
mdockter@siouxcityjournal.com
"The west side, I suppose, because I live there. But if this 'cultural renaissance' results in my rent going up because the neighborhood is more attractive, I don't want it at all."

ANSWERS FOR ALL YOUR WOES

DEAR ANNIE
ANNIE LANE

Waiting on my teenage love story

Dear Annie: I'm a 16-year-old girl who will turn 17 in four months. I just started my junior year of high school; school's busy, but I'm doing a pretty good job so far.

My dilemma is that I'm worried that I'll never lose my virginity in my 20s because I don't have "experience." And whenever I read stuff about people saying that they don't want to be with anyone if they're a virgin, it makes me feel even worse. I've never been kissed, and I've never had a boyfriend, so whenever I think about it, I get upset and my mind starts to spiral. Sometimes, with the way things are going now with dating, I start thinking that I'll never find someone without wearing revealing clothing or hooking up with every guy that I meet.

I know that you'll probably say, "Just focus on school." Which I am trying to do since I'm aiming to get all A's my junior year. But for me, when you don't have any relationship experience and you don't want to settle just to lose your virginity to any boy, it tends to be frustrating, especially with how boys these days can be. What should I do? — Teen With No Experience

Dear Teen: Focusing on school is always sound advice, but it's perfectly normal to also want a romantic relationship. Unfortunately, high school boys are usually not as mature as high school girls. Keep an open mind, but don't fall into the trap of believing the way things are in high school is the way that they will be forever.

High school is really just the beginning. You have so many years ahead of you to meet someone worth dating.

Dear Annie: Shortly after my daughter's surgery, I received a text notification that I had received a food delivery gift from a friend. This text came directly from the delivery service, with a photo of the delivery sitting at my front door. The trouble was, it wasn't my front door. The package was left elsewhere!

What would be the polite way to address this? Of course I want to thank the gifter, but should I let them know I never actually got the gift? I'd feel bad having them put even more effort into their gift, as I know those delivery services can be a real hassle. And I wouldn't expect them to buy it again. — Signed but Not Delivered

Dear Signed but Not Delivered: No one said modern gifting was easy. First and foremost, express your gratitude to your friend. Tell them how much you appreciate the gift and how much the kind gesture meant to you. Make that the primary message of your note. As an aside, you can add that the food delivery service bungled your address, but assure your friend that you care more about the gesture than the food so they don't feel compelled to get involved with customer service.

THE BEST THINGS TO DO IN SIOUXLAND

Sioux City Symphony Orchestra conductor Ryan Haskins.
TIM HYNDS, SIOUX CITY JOURNAL

Space-y sounds!

The Sioux City Symphony Orchestra will be transporting audiences to a galaxy far, far away when it performs composer John Williams' award-winning score live to a showing of "Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back," at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Tyson Events Center, 410 Gordon Drive. Does that mean music director Ryan Haskins will be conducting the orchestra with a light saber instead of a baton? Probably.

'Scar' Wars!

Hip-hop's Crucifix and Overtime are in the middle of their "Scars N' Stripes:

ANSWERS FOR ALL YOUR WOES

TWEEN 12
AND 20

WALLACE

I don't want to let dad down, but I need my cash

DR. WALLACE: I do a lot of chores at our family home, and the good news is that my parents give my two siblings and me a fair allowance for helping out. My dad really wants me to learn to save some money, but I want to get so many things that right now I don't have any "extra" money to leave stuck in the bank.

It's not mandatory that we save money, but when my dad opened bank accounts for all three of us, he put $100 into each account to get us started. My brother and sister both put some of their allowance in the bank each week, but so far I have not.

I don't like feeling like I'm letting my dad down, but I need a lot of cash to be a teenage girl at my high school! And by the way, I'm the oldest of the three of us, so I spend more time socializing out of the house, dressing up and dating than my younger brother and sister do. — The Firstborn, via email

THE FIRSTBORN: I'd recommend that you put at least 5 to 10% of your allowance in the bank each week. Whether you are able to spend 90% or 100% of your allowance to maintain your present lifestyle shouldn't affect you all that much. And even a small deposit regularly builds a good habit and will demonstrate to your father that you are appreciative of his guidance and that you are listening.

I do have a suggestion for you. You may want to ask your father if there are any extra chores you can do around the house, above and beyond everything you're currently expected to do. Let him know that if you are able to work on additional chores, you will put fully 50% of the additional money you earn into savings. This should satisfy both of you since you'll quickly pick up extra capital to be able to spend on your current desires and you'll be able to put away additional money as well.

In lieu of your father offering additional chores for extra payments, you might seek to do some babysitting or find a part-time job on weekends for the purpose of earning extra income that you could divide equally between spending and saving.

My dream is to live on a college campus somewhere

DR. WALLACE: I'm a senior in high school and I'm already thinking about going to college somewhere next fall. I'm an above-average student, but not the type who will get a big scholarship anywhere.

I'd love to go to a college out of our area and live on campus, but my parents just don't have that kind of money to support the college lifestyle I'd love to live.

I know college is a challenge and I'll need to focus on my studies quite a bit especially my first year while I'm getting used to the transition from high school into college. What can I do to improve my chances of living out my dream? — Dreaming Of Living on Campus, via email

DREAMING OF LIVING ON CAMPUS:

The best thing you can do at this point is try to find part-time work while you're going to high school and start banking some money right away. You have enough time to build up some savings and there are many jobs that need to be filled in our country, so your chances are good of landing a decent job that will pay you a reasonable wage for your time.

If you're able to accomplish this soon, you'll have the benefit of an entire school year to start building up your savings account. Then, using the connections you'll already have established, you should be able to work a lot of hours over the next summer before you go into college. The summer of 2024 could be a boon to your savings account and perhaps enable you to earn enough to be able to live on campus to start your college career. And once you get into the regular rhythm of college, you may find it, although you'll need to definitely carve out a lot of study time. You may have some time to work alongside your study time and social life.

Learning to use your time well both during your senior year in high school and your first year of college will also definitely help you build good habits to guide you through the rest of your life. Good luck!

There is hope.

Urban renewal

Years ago, West Seventh Street was filled with culture. Now, it is making a comeback

BY EARL HORLYK

Walking up and down Sioux City's West Seventh Street is like stepping back in time for Jim Tillman.

The major thoroughfare was the route where he and his friends would ride their bikes as kids. It was also the street he'd take when walking to the Boys Club every day after school.

However, for an older generation, West Seventh Street was where Sioux City's blues, gospel, jazz and rock and roll was born.

Long-ago establishments with names like Club 51, the 711 Lounge and the Swingin' Place were where residents would go for an evening of revelry.

"Back in the day, you could do a little sinning at a neighborhood club on a Saturday night and save your soul at the Mount Sinai Holiness Church on Sunday morning," Tillman, a Sioux City-based historian and author of "The Journal of African-American History: Sioux City," explained with a smile. "The nice thing is you could do it without having to leave West Seventh Street."

West Seventh Street, past and present, will be celebrated at "The Sounds of West Seventh," from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at Yummi Blox, 700 W. Seventh St.

"It will be a fun day with live music, food trucks and art," Sioux City Community Inclusion Liaison Semehar Ghebrekidan explained. "It will also highlight one of the city's most inclusive districts."

Ghebrekidan isn't kidding.

At various times in the Sioux City's history, West Seventh has been home to businesses owned by the Jewish population as well by members of the Black, Hispanic and Asian communities.

Or if you ask Charlie Prochelo, business ownership might have been a bit murky at time.

"My uncle A.J. 'Tony' Prochelo owned both the 711 Lounge and Club 51, but there was never a piece of paper with his name to prove it," he said, somewhat mysteriously. "Uncle Tony was what you would the 'silent partner' at both clubs."

Indeed, other members of the Prochelo Family owned such still-remembered establishments like the Orbit Room, the Turin Inn and the Triangle Club.

"I used to bartend at the Triangle Club," Charlie Prochelo said. "That was a fun place but it wasn't on West Seventh."

As a customer, Charlie Prochelo preferred the 711 Lounge, which his Uncle Tony sold to Clarence Kenner sometime in the 1960s.

"Clarence Kenner was from Kansas City and was a trumpeter in the Count Basie Orchestra during its heyday," Charlie Prochelo said. "When Clarence ran it, 711 was the place for jazz in Sioux City."

That's also the way Tillman remembered the 711 W. Seventh St. hotspot, which is now home to a car window tinting business.

Jim Tillman, a chronicler of Black history in Sioux City, sits in front of Archie's Diner on West Seventh Street. Archie Arvin owned the diner and was a keyboard player in the Clarence Kenner Trio that performed in Kenner's 711 Club about a block away.

TIM HYNDS, THE WEEKENDER

TIM HYND, THE WEEKENDER

Jim Tillman, a chronicler of Black history in Sioux City, points down West Seventh Street in Sioux City. Tillman will be part of the city's first Sounds of West Seventh Street music festival to be held Sept. 30 at Yummi Blox.

"Clarence's 711 was classy," he said. "Ladies had to dress appropriately and men had to wear dress slacks and button-up dress shirts. You couldn't look raggedy if you wanted to come into the 711."

The dress code was also the same for entertainers.

"Music was a side job for a lot of musicians," Tillman said, "Guys would be working at meatpacking plants during the day. Then, they'd get dressed up in tuxedos to perform at night."

Prochelo recalled seeing well-known performers like Preston Love Sr. at the 711.

"Preston Love Sr. was an incredible saxophone player from Omaha," he said. "Like Clarence Kenner, Preston worked with Count Basie before moving back to the Midwest."

Prochelo also saw Ash Bizzett, who was once a drummer with the world famous Ink Spots.

"Ash had a son named Russell," Prochelo said. "Russell Bizzett played the 711 Lounge as a young man. He later played drums with big named acts like Deep Purple."

In case you didn't know, Deep Purple was also a band which featured a fellow Sioux Cityan named Tommy Bolin.

"Tommy Bolin also got his start at the 711 Lounge," Tillman said. "Even though Clarence Kenner was Black, he was colorblind when it came to talent. If you were good, like Tommy Bolin was, Clarence wanted you to play at 711."

But times were changing at the 711 Lounge.

"Clarence Kenner died in the early 1970s and it went through several owners," Tillman said. "It stopped being the classy place it once was."

Indeed, West Seventh Street, in general, became a place where Tillman's mom wanted him to avoid.

"West Seventh became a rough place," Tillman said.

Much of that changed as small, family owned restaurants, grocery stores and beauty parlors started moving in.

"Today, you can see businesses owned by many different nationalities along West Seventh," Ghebrekidan said. "It's become a street and a neighborhood we can be proud of."

Which is why "The Sounds of West Seventh" will take place at Yummi Blox, a food truck owned by Peggy La, whose family owns the nearby Hong Kong Food Market.

"West Seventh Street might not have as many nightclubs as it did in the past," Ghebrekidan said, "but it does have plenty of multiculturalism."

At "The Sounds of West Seventh," Tillman will give a presentation on the street's colorful past. Yet he is also looking forward to its future.

"West Seventh isn't the same place it was when I was a kid," he said. "It's different but it still has an energy and excitement like nowhere else in Sioux City."

At age 20, Riverssance makes the 'middle ages' look good

BY EARL HORLYK

Phil Claeys longs for the days when men wore tights and when grog, served by a comely wench, could be had for a shilling.

In other words, he has a fondness for the Middle Ages.

Which is the damndest thing since the annual Gathering of the Kingdom of Riverssance is far from being middle age.

To be precise, the popular two-day Riverssance will celebrate its 20th birthday when it returns to Riverside Park, 1301 Riverside Blvd., on Saturday and Sunday.

Claeys, the event's founder, said he'll mark the occasion with an expanded Giving Tree children's area as well as a beefed-up slate of entertainers, including the Musical Blades and some Bawdy Buccaneers.

However, he is quick to point out that Riverssance has become a passion project not only for himself but also for its nearly 100 other volunteers.

"A Renaissance fair is like the ultimate street theater," he explained. "For all of us Renaissance reenactors, we get to become completely different people and Riverside Park becomes our own make-believe playground."

Claeys isn't kidding.

He'll be spending Riverssance in a frock as the Fallen Friar Phil.

There, he'll be joined by such festival faves as the Mud Man, Sir Robert and the Crow Sisters.

"Those characters are a big part of what makes our festival fun," Claeys said. "People come back every year just to see them."

In fact, costuming is encouraged but not required.

"We invite everyone to visit our kingdom as a visitor," Claeys said. "We will treat them as royalty, with or without Middle Age garb."

Which is good news for people who prefer the pageantry that is Riverssance.

Also returning are many of the food and drink options served throughout the fair, including at the bawdy "adult's only" Pirate's Smoker.

When Claeys came up with the concept of Riverssance, he had never been to a Renaissance Fair before.

"I just thought it looked like it would be fun," he said, chuckling at the memory.

Over time, Riverssance – which is part of River-Cade, Siouxland's longest-running summer festival – is widely considered to be one of the nicest Renaissance fairs in the Midwest.

"The main thing with Riverssance is that it continues to be a party," Claeys said. "Whether it attracts thousands of people or just me and my friends, going back to the Middle Ages will always be a blast."
