'Beverly Hills Cop II' returns Eddie Murphy to action

2026As sequels go, "Beverly Hills Cop II" is quite successful in keeping the action, humor and spirit that made its forerunner such a massive hit for Eddie Murphy. Being shown by MGM+ Drive-In on Wednesday, Aug. 19, and Thursday, Aug. 20 — along with the original 1984 movie and 1994's "Beverly Hills Cop III" — the 1987 second edition returns Murphy's Detroit detective Axel Foley to the East Coast to investigate the shooting of his California police pal Bogomil (fellow returnee Ronny Cox, who also made a great villain the same year in "RoboCop"), who was looking into a string of high-class robberies. Marked by alphabet clues left at the scenes, the crimes lead Foley to reunite with West Coast law-enforcement partners Rosewood and Taggart (Judge Reinhold and John Ashton, also reprising their roles), who don't have much interest in incurring the wrath of Bogomil's temperamental replacement (Allen Garfield) by stepping outside their assigned boundaries. Nevertheless, they also want to see justice done, so they reluctantly help Foley in a probe that eventually takes them to the Playboy Mansion ... complete with an appearance by Hugh Hefner. Directed by Tony Scott, who had just come off a massive hit with "Top Gun" (1986), "Beverly Hills Cop II" is as fast and entertaining as the first chapter that did much to cement Murphy's big-screen stardom. Within the plot specifics, he gets to do the comedic riffs that are so much a part of his brand, as when Foley maintains he's a psychic named Johnny Wishbone who has been sent to consult on the theft case. The colorful cast also includes Jurgen Prochnow as the criminal mastermind, the striking Brigitte Nielsen as his icy henchwoman, Dean Stockwell as another member of the enemy gang and Gilbert Gottfried as a fast-talking (of course) accountant. Gil Hill, an actual former Detroit cop, is back as Foley's generally un-amused boss; Paul Reiser also returns as Foley's Detroit police comrade who helps put up a smokescreen for Foley while the latter is out of town. As in the first film, music also is an essential element of "Beverly Hills Cop II," and the film earned an Oscar nomination for the Bob Seger-performed "Shakedown." The Pointer Sisters, who enjoyed great popularity with "New-Tron Dance" from the first "Beverly Hills Cop," contributed the similarly energetic "Be There" to this soundtrack. Fans of the franchise (which also yielded 2024's "Beverly Hills Cop: Axel F" on Netflix) will know what to expect from "Beverly Hills Cop II," and that's exactly what they'll get. And that's not a bad thing.
