Necar Zadegan and Jeremy Sisto in "FBI"

celebritypipeline BY JAY BOBBIN

It's all in the TV family for 'FBI' and 'CIA'

Q: Why are characters from "FBI" and "CIA" crossing over into each other's shows so regularly now? – Lucas Green, Lake Havasu City, Ariz.

A: It's the latest effort by executive producer Dick Wolf to create shared universes for multiple shows he makes, as with his "Law & Order" and "Chicago" franchises on NBC. Initially, it was intended for an "FBI" episode to double as a pilot for "CIA," but creative changes on the latter show kept pushing its production later ... so ultimately, CBS picked up "CIA" with a straight-to-series order, letting the pilot idea go.

However, Jeremy Sisto's "FBI" character Jubal Valentine appeared in the first "CIA" episode last February, thus keeping a link for the two shows. Since then, Missy Peregrym, Alana de la Garza and John Boyd also have played their "FBI" roles on "CIA," while "CIA's" Necar Zadegan has turned up on "FBI." Expect to see more of those crossovers as time goes on, particularly in cases where the same plot plays out over all of the series involved.

Q: I was sad to see that Eva Marie Saint had passed. Did she ever do any TV series? – Lauren Nichols, via e-mail

A: Though she wasn't a regular on them, anthology shows – with changing stories and casts each week – played a major part in launching Saint's career. She appeared on many of the most prominent ones including CBS's "Studio One" and NBC's "Goodyear Television Playhouse" and "Philco Television Playhouse." However, Saint became a regular on the NBC drama "One Man's Family" from 1950 to 1952, when she took over the part of daughter Claudia Barbour, a twin.

It was quite a while until Saint did television regularly again, and even then, it was for a relatively brief time. In 1977, she was in ABC's series version of "How the West Was Won" for four episodes. Then, between 1986 and 1988, she had the recurring role of Maddie's (Cybill Shepherd) mother on ABC's "Moonlighting." In voice only, Saint also spoke the words of the character Katara in the animated 2012-14 Nickelodeon show "The Legend of Korra."

While her series work was limited, Saint still was a frequent TV presence through the many movies and miniseries she made for the medium. She received a Primetime Emmy Award for the 1990 NBC drama "People Like Us," and for that network, she also made such notable projects as "When Hell Was in Session" (1979), "Splendor in the Grass" (1981), "Fatal Vision" (1984) and "A Year in the Life" (1986). CBS's "The Last Days of Patton" (1986) and "Titanic" (1996) were among Saint's other notable home-screen credits.
