BY JAY BOBBIN

Shelley Fabares had success with songs

Q: I know Shelley Fabares had a hit song with "Johnny Angel" and performed it on "The Donna Reed Show," but did she have any other popular tunes? — Barbara Mace, via e-mail

A: Without question, "Johnny Angel" was the big one for the late singer-actress, who reached the top of the charts with it in 1962. Interestingly, it had been recorded by two other artists previously, but those versions didn't have much impact. Fabares included it on her solo album "Shelley!," and it exploded when she performed it as her character Mary Stone in ABC's "The Donna Reed Show" during the sitcom's fourth season. The tune had a follow-up in "Johnny Loves Me," which came from Fabares's second album, "The Things We Did Last Summer." While it was a success, it didn't match the enormous heights "Johnny Angel" attained; the rest of that second album was made up of cover versions of songs such as Neil Sedaka's "Breaking Up Is Hard to Do," Connie Francis' "Vacation," Little Eva's "The Loco-Motion" and Freddy Cannon's "Palisades Park." Fabares had a third album, "Teenage Triangle," that also included cuts by her TV "brother" Paul Petersen and James Darren (with their respective hits "She Can't Find Her Keys" and "Goodbye Cruel World" among them).

Some interesting notes about "Johnny Angel" involve others who were heard on the track. Darlene Love, then fronting the group The Blossoms, was among the back-up singers; Glen Campbell was a guitarist on it; and legendary Wrecking Crew member Hal Blaine played the drums on it.
