The end of 'Euphoria' surprised some

Q: I was surprised that the season finale of "Euphoria" also turned out to be the series finale. Had that been mentioned before it was first shown? — Cynthia Abel, via e-mail

A: It hadn't been confirmed by HBO and series creator Sam Levinson until after that Season 3 wrap-up was first shown, but a good number of industry insiders apparently suspected that would be the case, considering how long it took to get the series principals back together to be able to continue the show in its third year. Such members of the ensemble as Zendaya, Sydney Sweeney and Jacob Elordi have become much-in-demand stars, so the results for them and (in some cases) their "Euphoria" characters can't have been completely unexpected.

Indeed, four years had passed between the second and third seasons of "Euphoria," setting up a necessary five-year time jump for the show. Before what became the last round began, Levinson had hedged in interviews when asked if there would be more of the series beyond that, but Zendaya (who won Primetime Emmy Awards for each of the first two "Euphoria" seasons) hadn't been shy about speculating that it might be the end — simply given how much other work she and many of her acting peers were getting and doing.
