Even as Dan Aykroyd does new television work, some of his classic projects continue to resurface. Not surprisingly, particularly during the Halloween season, “Ghostbusters” has been one of them. The original 1984 horror-comedy blockbuster already has been shown this month on such channels as Freeform, FX and Syfy; and ABC gives the movie another run Sunday, Oct. 25. Aykroyd, fellow “Saturday Night Live” alum Bill Murray, “SCTV” veteran Harold Ramis — also the picture’s co-writer, along with Aykroyd — and Ernie Hudson (now of CBS and Paramount+’s “Boston Blue”) play opponents of the paranormal who help a musician (Sigourney Weaver, “Alien,” 1979) try to rid herself of a demon that is plaguing her.

Directed by Ivan Reitman (“Meatballs,” 1979), “Ghostbusters” became known for elements that have become permanent fixtures of pop culture — including the title song by Ray Parker Jr. (“The Other Woman”), which has contributed to cementing “Who ya gonna call?” as one of the most familiar lines in movie history. Also immediately recognizable is the huge Stay Puft Marshmallow Man that generates a sticky situation for New York in more ways than one. The Ghostbusters franchise has endured for 40-plus years through sequels, animated shows, video games and other ventures.

A Primetime Emmy winner for his “Saturday Night Live” writing, Aykroyd has maintained his ties to television in an interesting way, often being involved in the documentary space — with themes connected to his “Ghostbusters” fame. He currently is presiding over the fourth season of the History Channel series “The UnBelievable With Dan Aykroyd” on Fridays, exploring unusual phenomena among people, places and things. One example in the current round: how the popularity of fish and chips almost led to a global war.

Even with such subject matter, Aykroyd maintains the glib, ironic approach he’s been known for since his career exploded as one of the original Not Ready for Prime Time Players when “Saturday Night Live” made its NBC debut in 1975. Among the many enduring characters he introduced were Beldar of the Coneheads and Elwood Blues of The Blues Brothers, both of which he parlayed into movie spinoffs.

The Ghostbuster named Ray Stantz also is one of the major roles in Aykroyd’s catalog, and in this Halloween month, it’s getting a giant workout as the original film’s return to broadcast TV is helping to affirm.

Hope Davis adds new ‘Fire’ to her TV career

Q: I know I’ve seen Hope Davis of “Line of Fire” in another series, but I can’t remember which one. What other shows has she done? — Don McMillan, via e-mail

A: Also a prolific movie and stage actress, the three-time Primetime Emmy nominee has done considerable television work since 2000, when she starred with “Chicago Med’s” Oliver Platt in the short-lived NBC newspaper drama “Deadline.” She then played one of several people with shared personal connections in the 2006-07 ABC drama “Six Degrees,” which also had a brief run.

In 2009, Davis had one of the alternating guest roles as a past patient and present lawyer of a psychotherapist (Gabriel Byrne) in HBO’s acclaimed “In Treatment.” She continued her work for HBO in the Kate Winslet-starring limited series “Mildred Pierce” (2011), then recurred as a problematic columnist in the first two seasons of “The Newsroom” (2012-13).

In NBC’s “Allegiance” (2015), Davis portrayed a former Russian agent who re-entered the spy game. Next for her series-wise was Fox’s off-beat “Wayward Pines” (2015-16), then she soon moved into Season 2 of the ABC anthology “American Crime” (2016). She stayed with ABC with the law drama “For the People” (2018-19), and also recurred on the then-CBS All Access show “Strange Angel” (2018).

Davis then recurred opposite Anna Kendrick in HBO Max’s “Love Life” (2020), following that with a starring role with Bryan Cranston in Showtime’s “Your Honor” (2020-23). She had a recurring role on HBO’s much-honored “Succession” between 2021 and 2023, and later, a recurring part in HBO’s version of “Perry Mason” (2023). And after a recent run in Hulu’s “Furious,” she’s now figuratively back where she started — on NBC, with “Line of Fire,” which has Jenna Bush Hager as one of its executive producers.
