Ron Howard in "American Graffiti"

Q: It was fun to see "American Graffiti" on Turner Classic Movies recently. Did Ron Howard make that while he also was in "Happy Days"? — Brian Mason, via e-mail

A: It's interesting how that worked, since in a way, each project inspired the other. Howard first played Richie Cunningham in a 1972 pilot for "Happy Days" that ended up running as an epi-isode of the ABC anthology

celebritypipeline BY JAY BOBBIN

How Ron Howard got 'Happy'

"Love, American Style." That was seen by "American Graffiti" director George Lucas, who was inspired by it to cast Howard in his 1973 movie as Steve Bolander — who was intending to go away to college with his pal Curt Henderson (Richard Dreyfuss), the brother of his girlfriend Laurie (Cindy Williams), after his 1962 high school graduation.

When "American Graffiti" became a hit, ABC suddenly became interested in having a nostalgic sitcom with Howard attached — and thus, "Happy Days" was resurrected. The rest is history since the show lasted 11 seasons (1974-84), with Henry Winkler another factor in its success as the iconically cool Arthur "Fonzie" Fonzearelli. Howard's "Happy Days" visibility likely didn't hurt his move into directing with the 1977 movie "Grand Theft Auto," which he also co-wrote and starred in, and with which he launched another huge and prominent chapter of his career.
