When 'The Fugitive' originally started running

David Janssen in "The Fugitive"

Q: I was glad to see the movie "The Fugitive" on The CW recently. When did the original TV series that it was based on air?
— Jerry Kim, Providence, R.I.

A: The Primetime Emmy Award-winning ABC drama that starred David Janssen ran from 1963 to 1967, with the conclusion — in which wrongly murder-accused Dr. Richard Kimble (Janssen) finally caught up to the actual killer, a famously one-armed man — among the highest rated series episodes ever televised. Repeats of the show can be seen on MeTV overnights Sunday into Monday, when it's paired with another Janssen program, "Harry O." The "Fugitive" movie was released in 1993, and to tie into it then, NBC reran the first and last episodes of the series, offering a primer for those who were about to see the Harrison Ford-starring film, which opened with its own explanation of why Kimble went on the run. NBC also had the television debut of the movie in 1996, and the picture now turns up frequently on such cable channels as AMC and TNT. A series remake of "The Fugitive," with Tim Daly as Kimble, aired on CBS during the 2000-01 season.
