WASHINGTON LEGISLATURE

ANTI-VAX RULES BLOCKED?

Victoria Ditkovsky/Dreamstime/TNS, contributed

The Washington state Capitol building in Olympia, Washington. The Legislature is reviewing a bill to prevent state and local governments from passing rules that prohibit the implementation or promotion of evidence-based disease control measures such as vaccines. Officials say Cowlitz County's medical freedom resolution, passed by the health board, would not be affected if the bill passed.

Minka Atkinson
makinson@tdn.com

A new bill under consideration in the state Legislature meant to protect public officials' ability to promote and utilize evidence-based disease control measures would not affect the Cowlitz County Board of Health's medical freedom resolution if passed, state officials confirmed.

House Bill 1531, which was filed by 15 Democratic representatives, would prevent state and local governments from passing rules that prohibit the implementation or promotion of evidence-based disease control measures such as vaccines. Any already existing rules that conflict with the bill would be voided.

The bill would also require officials to implement those measures when necessary as long as resources allow.

However, it would not affect the medical freedom resolution the board passed in 2023, said Andrew Linton, communications specialist for the office of Rep. Dan Bronoske, D-Lakewood. Bronoske is the bill's primary sponsor.

"This bill is about making sure citizens have all the facts and available data, so they can make informed decisions about their medical care," Linton said.

Bronoske said during a public hearing Friday that the bill was inspired by concerns at his local health department about policies in other states that prevent health departments from sharing certain information with the public.

The Louisiana Department of Health adopted a policy in December that forbade employees from promoting COVID-19, flu or mpox vaccines, and a public health department in Idaho voted in October to stop providing COVID-19 vaccines in the counties it covers.

Cowlitz County Health Officer Steve Krager wrote in an email that he supports the bill given those precedents, though he finds the language somewhat vague.

"I do find those types of restrictions on what public health can do very concerning," he said. "We always do our best to promote evidence-based recommendations and I think we should continue to be able to do so without interference."

The Cowlitz County Board's medical freedom resolution states that the county will not force individuals to put anything onto or into their body, and that public health emergency declarations from the World Health Organization should not be

Perez criticized for joining anti-LGBTQ host's event

Alexis Weisend
The Columbian

About 100 people spilled out of U.S. Rep. Marie Gluesenkamp Perez's Thursday, Jan. 30 town hall in Salmon Creek, as her recent alignment with House conservatives has ignited criticism of the Skamania Democrat.

Gluesenkamp Perez, who is outspokenly bipartisan, won against Donald Trump-backed Republican Joe Kent in a district where a majority voted for Trump as president.

Recently, she has come under fire for siding with Republicans on a controversial immigration bill, as well as inviting fellow members of Congress to join a Bible study held by an anti-LGBTQ evangelical.

Gluesenkamp Perez's
town hall at Three Creeks Community Library followed a tour of Evergreen High School earlier in the day and a visit to the Clark County Jail earlier that week. Constituents overflowed the library meeting room and stood outside doors propped
open so they could hear.

Gluesenkamp Perez was occasionally interrupted by protesters, some of whom carried signs.

In the past few months, Gluesenkamp Perez has voted in favor of the National Defense Authorization Act, which restricts access for gender-affirming care for transgender children of military service members, and the Laken Riley Act, which mandates the federal detention of undocumented immigrants accused of theft and violent crimes.

Although Gluesenkamp Perez discussed everything from farmers to unilaterally imposed. The resolution does not prohibit any disease control measures such as vaccines.

It does not have any legal impact on the county and is simply meant to affirm residents' freedom of choice, according to board Chairman Kelly Lane, who wrote the original draft of the resolution.

The first draft contained stricter terms saying that county resources would not be used to enforce disease lockdowns and placing limits on county officials' powers in emergency situations, but those were removed based on legal advice from the county Prosecuting Attorney's Office.

Lane and Vice Chairman Rick Dahl are the only current members who were on the board when it was passed. Both voted in favor of passing it.

COVID-19 and potential future health mandates remain a common topic of discussion at board meetings, especially among audience members. One audience member brought up the new bill as a potential concern at a Jan. 28 board meeting after asking the board to consider taking a stance on whether the COVID-19 vaccine should be banned. Krager said at the meeting that he did not have any major concerns about the vaccine, and that he was currently more focused on rising influenza cases.

"I've reviewed a lot of data around the COVID-19 vaccines, and I still think they're effective," he said.

tion, her reasoning for attending the Bible studies and the new administration.

Bible study

The town hall drew a rowdy mix of supporters and critics.

On Wednesday, Jan. 29, a Substack author released a letter signed by Gluesenkamp Perez and 12 male Republicans inviting other House members to a Bible study led by Ralph and Danielle Drollinger.

Ralph Drollinger is notorious for his anti-LGBTQ views.

"One need not look very far into Scripture to learn of God's singular definition of marriage and His subsequent sweeping disapproval of same-sex marriage," he states on the Capitol Ministries website.

In response to a question about her involvement in the study group, Gluesenkamp Perez confirmed she had signed the letter. Gluesenkamp Perez, whose father was an evangelical pastor, said her faith is central to who she is.

"I think it's so important that Christians on the left are engaged in staying in the church," she said.

Conversations in the Bible study often devolve into a political debate, she said.

"I'm there to uphold my values and to say, 'Use the whole (Bible); don't cherry pick the parts you agree with,'" she said. "The Bible does say to take care of your neighbor, to love your neighbor."

Gluesenkamp Perez's office said she was aware that Ralph Drollinger holds views on the LGBTQ community with which she does not agree.

In a statement to The Columbian, Gluesenkamp Perez said being in the group has allowed her to stay connected to her faith while traveling and share a different perspective with her colleagues while finding common ground where they agree in Scripture.

"These are men who are committed to maintaining strong marriages and raising good kids, and who are trying to maintain an inner life and hold themselves to a higher standard," she said.

Immigration

Many in the crowd had questions about her position on various immigration initiatives. Last week, Gluesenkamp Perez was one of 46 House Democrats to vote in favor of the Laken Riley Act, which mandates federal detention of undocumented immigrants accused of theft and violent crimes.

U.S. Rep. Marie Gluesenkamp Perez, D-Skamania, speaks to constituents at a Thursday, Jan. 30 town hall at Three Creeks Community Library in Vancouver.

Protesters yelled that the bill strips undocumented immigrants of due process rights.

Gluesenkamp Perez called the bill "far from perfect legislation" but pointed to an influx of fentanyl into the U.S.

"It's important that our law enforcement have the resources they need to move bad actors out. ... These cartels are well served by a broken immigration system, and we cannot allow that to continue," she said.

On Wednesday, the Trump administration revoked a temporary protected status extension for Venezuelans, which removes work authorizations and makes Venezuelan immigrants eligible for deportation.

Gluesenkamp Perez, whose father immigrated from Mexico, said she feels like temporary protected status is a "very necessary function" when the county has not passed "substantive immigration reform through Congress in a long time."

"I think it's a mistake to do a wholesale revocation, as opposed to building the capacity to look at people as individuals," she said. "Your access, your status here, should not be dependent on whether or not you can find a lawyer who is going to help you navigate the system, but rather on the particulars of your case itself."

A new administration

Gluesenkamp Perez's town hall, which was the 12th since her term began, came at the tail end of a week rife with change and uncertainty as the Trump administration issued a flurry of executive orders.

"This is obviously a time of really heightened anxiety," Gluesenkamp Perez said. "It's been a rodeo."

A White House order, and later rescission, to freeze all federal grants and loans threw Clark County governments, schools and nonprofits in disarray.

The same day, the Trump administration sent an offer to federal employees to resign from their jobs by Feb. 6 and be paid through the end of September.

Gluesenkamp Perez has not stated a position on the funding freeze and didn't do so during last week's town hall. Twenty Southwest Washington nonprofits sent Gluesenkamp Perez a letter the same day criticizing her for that silence.

2 killed, 3 injured in Clatskanie shooting

Matthew Esnayra
mesnayra@tdn.com

The Columbia County Sheriff's Office is investigating after two people were killed, and three others injured in a shooting on Saturday, Feb. 1 in Clatskanie.

According to a Monday Columbia County Sheriff's Office press release, the shooting occurred at about 1:25 p.m. at a home in the 21100 block of Ilmari Road after an argument turned violent.

The office states no arrests have been made.

Anthony Hanson, 32, of Clatskanie reportedly pulled a gun and opened fire on four people in the house.

When medics arrived, they found one of the people in the home — Molly Cassidy, 28, of Lebanon — dead, the report states.

Another victim, Ryan Thies, 21, of Clatskanie retaliated by returning fire and killing Hanson in the process, the notice continues.

Hanson and Theis were both lived in the home, authorities report.

Three victims were transported to an area hospital.

Sheriff Brian Pixley said in the press release that the office is reviewing evidence, including witness statements, and the investigation is ongoing.

Pixley told The Daily News the connection between the suspect and the victims "varied from friendly to family."

Suspected DUI crash injures child

The Daily News
frontdoor@tdn.com

Washington State Patrol reports intoxicants may have played a role in crash on Saturday, Feb. 1 that sent a man and a 5-year-old child to the hospital.

The crash occurred at about 7:20 p.m., in the southbound lane of West Side Highway at milepost three, close to the Tiny Home Tap House at 800 Westside Hwy. in Kelso, according to a Washington State Patrol Press Memo.

Ryan R. Hamar, 47, of Longview, was driving a 2006 Chevy Colorado when he struck an embankment, rolled over and came to a stop, blocking the roadway. Both Hamar and his child passenger were sent to PeaceHealth St. John Medical Center for medical attention.

Hamar is suspected of driving under the influence of an intoxicant and may face DUI and reckless driving charges.

The child was wearing a seatbelt, but it is unknown if Hamar was wearing his, according to the press memo.

LEE ENTERPRISES PUBLIC SERVICE INVESTIGATION

Trans homeless women face elevated violence

Survey: Most PNW women assaulted while living on the streets

Nicole Hayden
Public Service Journalism Team

Lonness divides her life into four main acts of violence.

Each incident she wasn't surprised to experience. Maybe if she was a cisgender woman — someone who is assigned female at birth and identifies as that assigned sex — she would have been lucky enough to have experienced only one or two violent attacks.

After all, most women who have experienced homelessness report experiencing violence from strangers.

But Lonness is an intersex trans woman — something that seems to make angry people even angrier and violent people more violent, she said.

"I knew when I started transitioning, I didn't need beauty tips. I needed to learn how to protect myself," said Lonness, now 43.

She understands living a life in fear of violence and reckoning with the impact that leaves. In this report, Lee Enterprises omits full names of violence victims to protect their safety and identity.

Lee Enterprises Public Service Journalism Team surveyed 150 women at daytime and overnight homeless shelters across the Pacific Northwest. A majority — 57% — said they had been physically or sexually assaulted at some point while experiencing homelessness, often after leaving an abusive home.

And of the 10 transgender and nonbinary women who participated in the survey, all said they experienced that violence.

Since 2015, transgender homelessness rose 217% nationwide, compared to 14.5% for cisgender people, according to the 2024 State of Homelessness Report compiled by the National Alliance to End Homelessness.

Many young people are kicked out of their homes by their families when they come out. Some people are discriminated against in the workplace or harassed so severely that work becomes emotionally harming, and others get turned away for housing because of their identity, advocates said.

Oftentimes, people experience a combination of barriers that begin to snowball.

Lonness was abandoned at 12 by her mother, who hoped the separation meant Lonness wouldn't experience the growing violence at home. She was thrust into the Louisiana foster care system until she was released by the state at 16.

While she's no longer unhoused, she spent seven years, spread through various moments of her life, living outside in parks and makeshift shelters.

As an adult, she "did a Hail Mary" and left everything behind to move to Seattle, she said.

"Things were getting really bad in the south," she said. "Violence was increasing against trans people. Hurricane Katrina messed up my job and ruined my trailer. I saw that as an opportunity to find a place that had rights for someone like me."

Initially a guest herself, Lonness now volunteers at Elizabeth Gregory Home in Seattle, a day center for women that largely serves people experiencing homelessness and those in poverty. The nonprofit attracts trans women because its workers are known to not tolerate any kind of hate that might permeate other gender-specific homeless shelters.

"Everyone has come from other places," she

NICOLE HAYDEN, LEE ENTERPRISES

The Marie Equi Center in Portland used trauma-informed design to create a calming, safe and affirming space for the queer and trans people it serves.

said. "About 80% of the trans people we serve here come from other states, largely red states."

Lonness has experienced cisgender women becoming angry at her presence at other women's centers. While she doesn't identify as a man, when she stayed at men's or co-ed shelters in the past it often led to extreme harassment or violence due to her gender identity.

"We just end up being sad shells moving around in 'women's spaces' where we feel like we don't belong," Lonness said. "But at Elizabeth Gregory, they made us feel like we were supposed to be there and that we were not a burden."

Offering safety and acceptance is an obvious way to make housing insecure women of all gender identities feel welcome. But there are other ways nonprofits can offer trauma-informed resources and spaces, like comfortable chairs or spaces where women can sleep during the day after staying awake all night for safety, Lonness said.

Connor Magee, volunteer and community relations manager at Rahab's Sisters, a women's day center in Portland, said trans women are much more likely to report that losing connections with family who did not accept their gender identity was a significant factor in becoming homeless. Offering a space that provides a safe community is key to helping people heal.

While Rahab's Sisters provides services often not found at other shelters — including prosthetic body parts and binders, which are tight garments to flatten the chest, for trans individuals — it also hosts community gatherings to foster new friendships like karaoke and art nights.

"In our clothing boutique, we not only stock warm winter jackets but designer dresses and high heel shoes," Magee said. "We want to affirm people's full humanity and full life and gender."

Prosthetics and binders typically aren't approved purchases under many funding grants, so Rahab's Sisters must rely on private donors and community support for such items.

On the other side of Portland, The Marie Equi Center began as a health care nonprofit for trans and queer people.

They believe connecting people to hormone replacement therapy will allow them to start feeling more comfortable in their bodies, letting deep-rooted fears and anxieties go to start addressing other stabilizing resources they may need.

As community needs shifted, housing services became a central focus. From the beginning, though, they have always employed majority queer and trans people, said director Katie Cox.

"Folks coming in being able to see their identity reflected in their service providers is a big deal," Cox said. "And being a center created by queer and trans people, for queer and trans people, is a big deal too."

Many organizations have been throwing around the phrase "trauma-informed design" as talks of progressive spaces and services rise to the top of conversation. But truly creating a safe space requires more than nice murals on the walls.

"Lots of folks in our community have experienced trauma along the way," Cox said. "It was an important piece for us to think about how people with different abilities and body sizes might move through our space."

Their team purchased furniture with high weight limits and without restricting arms. They used paint colors that were calming and provided low stimulation. Lights aren't bright and many are dimmable. It is cozy and home-like, not sterile.

"We wanted this place to be so unapologetically queer and trans that it makes straight people, or people who may not be friendly to our community, uncomfortable," Cox said.

But as support staff work with guests at The Marie Equi Center to access housing, workers worry about what their guests may encounter outside of its safe walls. Finding an inhabitable, affordable apartment often feels like an insurmountable task. Finding housing that is completely safe for trans people, particularly women, is largely impossible.

"Will they be safe?" Cox asks. "We never have good answers to those questions. Where folks end up depends on availability, and we can't control who else is in the building ... But we do know we need a housing project that is queer and trans specific ... and we need to figure out how to establish a queer and trans 24-hour shelter, because many folks won't access shelter because they don't feel safe."

How we did it: Data on domestic violence and housing

Nicole Hayden

To understand the impact of domestic violence on women's housing stability, the Lee Enterprises Public Service Journalism Team surveyed 150 women from July through October 2024 across eleven women's daytime and overnight shelters throughout the Pacific Northwest.

Shelters included: Rose Haven in Portland, Rahab's Sisters in Portland, Blanchet House in Portland, Simonka Place in Salem, Angelene's Day Center in Seattle, Cultivate Initiatives in Portland, Catholic Charities in Portland, PDX Saints Love in Portland, Elizabeth Gregory Home in Seattle, Women at the Well Grace House in Salem, and Mary's Place in Seattle.

The survey questions were created after conducting listening sessions at Rose Haven, a women's day shelter in Portland, Oregon.

During those sessions, guests anonymously talked with the reporter about their experiences with homelessness, gender-based violence and accessing supportive services.

The listening sessions informed the creation of survey questions, and then research and subject matter experts were consulted before finalizing the questions.

The experts included Liz Starke at Rose Haven, Sybil Hebb at Oregon Law Center and John Horwick at DHM Research.

The surveys were anonymous and voluntary.

The reporter offered snacks and crafts to ease the traumatic impact of talking through their lived experiences.

Survey participants were not paid for their participation, but all women at the shelters could take snacks and make bracelets or keychains even if they didn't participate in the survey.

Pacific Crest Trail thru-hikers are no longer able to enter Canada

Thru-hikers no longer allowed to cross border

Planning a 2,650-mile trek on the Pacific Crest Trail from the U.S.-Mexico border to Canada? Prepare to turn around.

On Monday, the Canada Border Services Agency announced it will no longer issue permits for hikers to cross from Washington's Pasayten Wilderness into E.C. Manning Provincial Park in British Columbia, formally ending a long-held practice. Instead of continuing 8 miles north from the border to Manning Park Resort and the nearest road (where, presumably, a ride home awaits), hikers now must backtrack 30 miles to Hart's Pass, outside Mazama, to reach civilization.

A CBSA spokesperson said the proposed change was in the works before the American presidential election and aligns Canadian policy with long-standing U.S. policy, which does not permit southbound hikers to cross into Washington.

An estimated 700 people completed the long-distance trail in 2024, per the Pacific Crest Trail Association. Trail information manager Jack Haskel said most prefer hiking through to Manning Park rather than back to Hart's Pass.

"If it's blue skies and conditions are great, most people aim to enter Canada as opposed to turning around," he said.

The move comes five weeks after the Canadian government announced a CA$1.3 billion (about $900 million) border security plan. Canada has already deployed 60 new drones along its southern border and will eventually install additional surveillance towers, X-rays and handheld chemical analyzers.

"The CBSA is working alongside its partners to support the national security and public safety at our borders," the spokesperson said via email. "We operate in a constantly evolving environment and regularly evaluate our programs and operations to ensure we carry out our mandate to efficiently and effectively manage a secure border."

PCT thru-hikers — who already have to plan the logistics of resupplying on a multimonth hike, train for physical exertion and prepare for obstacles ranging from heavy snow to wildfires — are taking the decision in stride. Some see the extra 30 miles of hiking through the North Cascades as a "victory lap," a chance to high-five hikers still trudging north.

Ruston resident Amelia Ehrens got an inkling of the coming change in November, when her border-crossing permit application for this year was rejected without explanation. Now that the new policy is official, she no longer has to sort out the logistics of getting from E.C. Manning Provincial Park back to Washington, but she was looking forward to finishing her hike by crossing the border.

"I thought it was a really cool idea because you're essentially crossing the entire country by foot and ending at the border of another country," she said. "To have that trust to just be able to walk over the border without anyone checking was really nice, but I completely understand why, especially if you can't enter the U.S. from Canada. It's fair."

For the Pacific Crest Trail Association, the decision is "a disappointing development," said Haskel, who hiked the PCT northbound in 2006.

"The opportunity to cross into Canada has been a cherished part of the experience for many people for decades," he said.

"When I hiked across America, the final steps into Canada helped provide closure and a sense of accomplishment and also added to the bewilderment that I felt reentering society in a new place."

Finishing the PCT in British Columbia was also off-limits to thru-hikers in 2020 and part of 2021 during the peak of the coronavirus pandemic, when Canada prohibited nonessential travel over the border.

One ancillary outcome of the policy shift: a heavier stream of hikers heading into Mazama, the closest U.S. town to the Northern Terminus.

Volunteer "trail angel" Mary LaVerne Garber-Williams will be ready to welcome hikers at her 2-acre property, Lion's Den, which she has opened for the last three PCT seasons. Thru-hikers can pitch their tent and avail themselves of her hiker's hut, equipped with a kitchen, shower and living room. She even does laundry — and offers the whole operation by donation to over 1,500 hikers annually.

With everyone who makes it to the end turning back around in 2025, she's anticipating even more traffic this year.

"I know it's going to be extra busy," she said.

'NOOKS DOUBLE WIN TOTAL

Dan Rosenfield, The Daily News

In a span of 10 days, the Chinooks won six games in a row — one more than they won all of last season.

They currently sit in a tie for third place in the 1A Trico League and are guaranteed a spot in the district tournament.

Despite moving back up to 1A, dealing with a low turnout, injuries and players' scheduling conflicts, the Chinooks (11-8, 8-5) have more than doubled their win total from last year with one more game left in the regular season.

"The crazy thing is, last year, we had so many games that were that close, like we're right on the edge of doing well, that I knew anything was possible," Kalama coach Amber Doerty said. "They just believe in it. They believe in each other and that's great."

Blessing in disguise

Part of their success has been, ironically, moving up a division. In previous years while in the Central 2B League, they constantly had to go through top teams in the classification, making it difficult to build any kind of momentum.

"I honestly don't mind not playing Adna and Napavine and Toutle Lake, I don't," Doerty said. "It's nice to have someone fresh to play against that doesn't know everything about you and it's just kind of like a clean slate, fresh start."

The transition to 1A has also gone well for Doerty's daughter, Aubrey, who is averaging 16.8 points, 7.4 rebounds, 4.4 assists, 3.6 steals and 2.6 blocks per game.

The senior, of course, gave all the credit to her teammates, particularly in passing.

"Teamwork is the best, you know?" she said. "You can't win a game just (by) yourself."

A stat line like hers certainly has her in the running for the league's player of the year, but she hasn't given that much thought.

"I mean, if people are looking at me, that's awesome," she said, "but I'm just here working with my team."

'It's like a puzzle'

It also took some strategy to reach the team's success.

Coach Doerty only had 16 girls on the roster between junior varsity and varsity at the beginning of year and had to add some eighth graders to the program. With so few players, some of them have to switch off between junior varsity and varsity.

"... One person got hurt, a couple of people didn't realize they signed up for basketball or didn't realize it was that hard," she said. "It's like a

Bockert continues to break records in Woodland

Dan Rosenfield
drosenfield@tdn.com

With her 39 points in last week's win over R.A. Long, Woodland's Kennedy Bockert broke the program's single-season scoring record of 439 points which she set last season.

She now holds the record with 456 points and counting with one regular season game left, as of Tuesday, Feb. 4.

"It's a cool accomplishment to have, but the most important thing is trying to win a league championship," Bockert said.

She also broke the program's single-season record for offensive rebounds in a season last week after grabbing 12 boards on the offensive glass. She is on pace to break the program's records for both defensive rebounds and total rebounds (302) in a season, both of which she set last year.

On top of that, her 39 points and 17 field goals

Portland Trail Blazers backup center Duop Reath hit a game-winning shot for the Rip City Remix on Sunday, leading to a celebration with teammates from both teams.

Reath swished a fall-away jumper just inside the three-point line near the left corner as time expired to give the Remix a 127-125 win over Windy City at the Chiles Center.

Washington Huskies promote Dougherty to offensive coordinator

Andy Yamashita
The Seattle Times

Feb. 3—If someone told Jimmie Dougherty that — one day — he'd be the offensive coordinator at the University of Washington, he isn't sure he would have believed them.

Back in 2009, Dougherty arrived at UW to become Steve Sarkisian's wide receivers coach. It was a breakthrough moment for Dougherty, his first FBS job after seven seasons working his way through Division III and FCS football.

Nearly a decade and a half later, Dougherty will assume the title he never imagined holding.

"To think now I have this opportunity to be the offensive coordinator is beyond my wildest dreams, really," Dougherty said. "It's a huge honor, one that I take very seriously."

Dougherty, who spent the past season as UW's quarterbacks coach and passing game coordinator, was announced as Washington's new offensive coordinator by coach Jedd Fisch on Monday. He replaces Brennan Carroll, who departed to become the offensive line coach for the Las Vegas Raiders on Monday morning.

"Having Jimmie as our offensive coordinator means a great deal to me," Fisch said.

Dougherty endured a long journey back to Washington and an offensive coordinator title.

His first stint with the Huskies was reasonably successful. Jermaine Kearse racked up a majority of his 2,871 career yards while under Dougherty's tutelage, and he also helped UW sign Kasen Williams and Jaydon Mickens.

Dougherty departed UW after the 2012 season, coinciding with Sarkisian's exit to become the coach at USC. But unlike Justin Wilcox, Peter Sirmon, Johnny Nansen and Keith Heyward, Dougherty didn't follow Sarkisian to Southern California.

Instead, he became the offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach at San Jose State, reuniting with former San Diego coach Ron Caragher. Dougherty went back to coaching wide receivers in 2015 before becoming an offensive analyst at Michigan for another former San Diego coach he'd previously worked for, Jim Harbaugh, in 2016.

At Michigan, Dougherty connected with Fisch, who was coaching wide receivers and quarterbacks. Fisch said he considered Dougherty a "fantastic" football coach during their time together with the Wolverines, so he made sure to bring Dougherty with him to UCLA a year later.

While Fisch only spent one season with the Bruins before moving on to the NFL, Dougherty spent four seasons at UCLA coaching wide receivers, including future first-team All-Pac-12 receiver Kyle Philips and Chase Cota.

Fisch said Dougherty was the first person he asked to join the staff at Arizona after Fisch was hired by the Wildcats before the 2021 season. When Fisch accepted the coaching job at UW before the 2024 campaign, Dougherty was "the first person on the plane" to Seattle.

"Certainly excited about the opportunity to have him lead the offense as we move forward," Fisch said.

The UW coach isn't the only one happy to endorse Dougherty as the Huskies' new offensive coordinator. Tight ends coach Jordan Paopao, who was recruited by Dougherty to San Diego as a player, said his trust in Dougherty is "unwavering," especially after spending the past three seasons coaching alongside him at Arizona and now UW.

"Very seldomly do you get a chance to work with guys that you trust, that you love, that you've grown with over the better part of a decade," Paopao said, "and that's what we have."

Added quarterback Demond Williams Jr.: "I feel like Jimmie D's the type of guy that's going to be the same person every day, regardless of overall, 7-3 (WCC) absorbed their sixth consecutive Quad 1 loss after opening the season 2-0 in that category with victories over Baylor and San Diego State. Saint Mary's, No. 21 entering Saturday's game vs. GU, is No. 22. The Gaels (20-3, 10-0) are 3-1 in Quad 1 — their neutral-court victory over Nebraska in November became Q1 with the Cornhuskers climbing to No. 50 — and 4-2 in Quad 2.

Gonzaga entertains Loyola Marymount (No. 136, Quad 3) on Thursday before a road date against Pacific (306, Quad 4) on Saturday. Jerry Palm of CBS Sports projects Gonzaga as a 10 seed in the Midwest Region with the Gaels a nine seed in the South. On3.com has eighth-seeded GU facing No. 9 Baylor in a rematch of the season opener won by the Zags 101-63.

The Zags project as an 8 seed, according to Bracketmatrix.com. Teamrankings.com lists GU as the last nine seed.

Gonzaga will have several chances in its regular-season closing six-game stretch to move up or down the seed lines.

The Zags' last games include two Quad 2 matchups.

The shot occurred near several Blazers in attendance, including coach Chauncey Billups. They, along with Remix players, mobbed Reath as soon as the shot went in.

The celebration, Billups said, points to how connected the team has become.

"It speaks to the culture of our team," Billups said.

The Blazers defeated the Suns 127-108 on Saturday night, yet most of the team made it to the Remix game at noon on Sunday.

"It just couldn't have happened any better," Billups said. "Last-second shot right in front of all of us. Before the ball came out of the net, all our players were on the court. It was amazing."

his role or what he has going on. That's what I love about him."

Dougherty, like Paopao, believes internal promotions will help with offensive cohesion entering 2025.

Paopao, running backs coach Scottie Graham and wide receivers coach Kevin Cummings have been with Dougherty and Fisch since 2021. Newly promoted offensive line coach Michael Switzer first joined Fisch's staff as a senior offensive analyst in 2022.

"There's confidence when you've done it together, when you've been through a rebuild together," Dougherty said. "You started from the bottom and took it to a certain height. We know what it looks like. We know what it takes."

While Dougherty's role won't change too drastically with the promotion — Fisch will continue to be the team's offensive play caller — the newly anointed offensive coordinator said he's excited to take a larger role in guiding the offense and translating Fisch's offensive ideas onto the gridiron.

Dougherty also admitted the Huskies fell short of their offensive expectations in 2024. UW averaged 23.4 points per game a season ago, 12th among Big Ten teams, despite their 390.5 total yards per game ranking sixth in the conference.

And while Washington will have a full season with Williams under center, the Huskies and Dougherty have to replace important skill-position players like receivers Giles Jackson and Jeremiah Hunter and tight end Keleki Latu, along with navigating a highly scrutinized offensive line.

"Our offense was not what we envisioned last year in terms of production," he said. "We know there's things we have to be better at, and we will be better at. We know this process works."

puzzle, like a literal dance when you're like, 'OK, who am I gonna swing? Who's gonna play how many quarters?'"

She said she believes basketball is a particularly difficult sport to excel in, citing factors such as the work ethic, endurance and the skill level required.

"... If you're a track athlete, there're some events that are just for strength or some that are for speed, but in basketball, you have to have that ability to see everything, the big picture, all the basketball skills, passing, shooting all that stuff, so it can be hard for people to wanna do that work," she said.

Skipping soccer

The team also recently saw the return of Sienna DiCristina, who missed all but the first game of the year with an injury, and Bridgette Hollifield, who missed games earlier this season to play club soccer.

At the beginning of the season, Hollifield said her Vancouver-based club soccer practices conflicted with many of the basketball games.

Now her practice schedule has switched, and with the regular season coming to a close and playoffs looming, Hollifield said she is ready to skip soccer for basketball as the 'Nooks look to make a run in the district tournament.

She said it was challenging for her teammates to be without her in the beginning of the season.

"... They understand that soccer is my first sport, but I put in the energy I can," she said.

And she has enough energy to

Kelso coach Justin Fugleberg: "We were bowling some of our best heading into districts and we continued to do just that. During the first team game we struggled to throw the ball consistently and unfortunately it put us behind right from the start."

The next two games were above our season average, however, Evergreen and Prairie were just bowling at another level today.

Sitting third after individuals, our team continued to be above our season Baker average, but we just couldn't claw back enough to take the second team spot and finished third.

This was a rough third-place finish as we had high expectations as we led the field stat wise for the season.

When it mattered, Evergreen and Prairie just put together some of their best bowling of the season to run away with the state team spots.

Our team should hold their heads high and be proud of their efforts today. On the individual side, we have three bowlers who qualified for state; Arianna Long, Paige Molyneux, and Layla Davenport.

Arianna finished sixth overall and just missed medaling for fifth by 14 pins. Other than struggling in her first game, Arianna rolled the ball well today and showed us why she's been our anchor all season.

Paige finished 11th overall and was consistent all day. Layla finished 12th overall and just grinded it out to improve each game.

This is Arianna and Layla's first time qualifying for state and Paige's second straight year. Since we weren't able to take the team to state, taking three of the five varsity players is a nice consolation and well deserved for their season of hard work."

Oregon men's basketball loses at No. 24 Michigan for 4th straight loss

 oregonlive.com

Oregon played better and harder at Michigan than the past two weeks, but the final result was unchanged in a fourth straight loss.

Jackson Shelstad had 18 points, four rebounds and four assists to lead four players in double-figures for the Ducks in an 80-76 loss to the No. 24 Wolverines Wednesday, Feb. 5 at Crisler Center.

Oregon (16-7, 5-7 Big Ten) got within one possession multiple times during the second half, but could never fully close the gap due to poor shooting and turnovers. UO shot 43.3% from the field, but went just 2 of its final 12 from the field, including 0 for 7 from three in that span, and did not make a field goal in the final 3:18.

"I thought we made a step," Oregon coach Dana Altman said on postgame radio. "Our effort and our flying around, our talk was better. Obviously the boards, second-chance points we got beat seven there. Then points off turnovers, we had so many unforced turnovers."

"Get it down to a two-point game and Jackson throws it out of bounds, TJ (Bamba) threw it out of bounds — unforced, (Jadrian Tracey) turns it over — unforced. We get it down to a two-point game, we had three unforced turnovers. Really hurt us. But the guys battled. I had no problem with their effort in this one."

Michigan went just 1 of its final 9 from the field but held on behind 17 points from Will Tschetter and Vladislav Goldin and Danny Wolf each added 15. Wolf also had 12 rebounds for his 10th double-double of the season.

The Wolverines (17-5, 9-2) scored 25 points off 12 turnovers by the Ducks and had a 21-13 advantage in second-chance points. UM remained undefeated at home and snapped a three-game skid in the all-time series.

Nate Bittle had 16 points and seven rebounds, Keeshawn Barthelemy had 15 points, five rebounds and six assists and Bamba had 13 points and a career-high 10 rebounds for the Ducks.

Shelstad went 7 of 17 from the field, including 2 of 6 from three, and made a pair of free throws. He scored 12 points in the first half as Michigan took a 41-36 lead into the break thanks to its second-chance points and capitalizing off UO turnovers.

After a 1 of 5 start from the field in the first half, Bamba sent 3 of 7 from the field, including 1 of 3 from three.
