

In the town of Miletta, the citizens live for their screens—streaming, swiping, posting, and posting about streaming and swiping. But when the internet suddenly goes out, chaos erupts. With nothing left to scroll, the townspeople are forced to rediscover ancient relics like... talking to each other, reading books, and even writing letters by hand (with pens!). What follows is a hilarious look at just how dependent we've become on our devices—and what happens when the loading bar finally stops spinning.
