Board member resigns

BANDON — A longtime member of the Southern Coos Hospital District board of directors, Carol Acklin, has resigned.

Acklin recounted what had occurred with the board some months ago when three of the five members voted to fire the CEO Amy Fine. Neither Acklin nor former board member Tom Bedell (who resigned after the firing) knew about the motion to fire Fine until the night of the meeting, according to Acklin and Bedell. As a result three complaints were filed through the Oregon Ethics Commission against the three board members.

The Commission took up the issue and handed down their decision last week.

"As it turned out, the entire board was included by the Ethics Commission and we were all sanctioned and will be given a 'letter of education,' Since I was not involved in any way and I told the State that, they said it didn't matter as I was in attendance at the meeting where this occurred," Acklin said.

"I decided that I did not want to continue serving with a board that I no longer trusted nor respected, so submitted my resignation effective immediately," said Acklin.

The board is seeking a new member to fill Acklin's seat.

Bandon construction boom continues

BANDON — The latest update from the City of Bandon's planning department indicate they remain busy with construction applications and general inquiries from the public.

Year to date the Planning Department has received 98 applications, including 25 for single-family dwellings, which is on trend for the last four years.

In order to devote more time to processing applications for property inside the city limits, the city has temporarily suspended activity on most applications from outside the city limits, many of which are in the Sunset City Addition, where some owners are attempting to divide their property into smaller lots, but are unable to do that without the guarantee of city water, according to the city.

The Bandon City

Council discussed the issue recently and felt that applications within the city must take precedence over those outside the city, according to the council.

"As the construction season fades with the approaching rainy weather, the Planning Department will ramp up work on improvements to our permitting process through a series of code updates, procedural changes, and increased community engagement," said Planning Manager Dana Nichols.

"We will also be working with state and county partners to clarify and enhance our development process for properties within the Urban Growth Boundary, but outside the city limits," Nichols added, referring primarily to properties in the Sunset City south of the city limits along Beach Loop.
