paralytic shellfish poisoning outbreak closes shellfish harvests on coast

> WILL CHAPPELL Headlight Editor

For nearly a month, the harvesting of shellfish on the Oregon coast has slowed to a crawl as mussels, clams and oysters have been inundated with toxins that cause paralytic shellfish poisoning in humans. The outbreak occurred exceptionally quickly, striking at least 31 people ill, including several who were admitted to the hospital, and at least one who was put on a ventilator.

Matthew Hunter, shellfish program leader at the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife (ODFW), said that the outbreak had occurred at a pace and on a scale that had never been recorded in Oregon before.

Paralytic shellfish poisoning is caused by saxitoxins or domoic acid produced in algal blooms by phytoplankton, with a genus known as alexandrium responsible for the most recent outbreak. Those phytoplankton produce saxitoxin and are always present in algal blooms, but Hunter said that shifting wind, solar and nutritional conditions cause overstimulation and increased activity, leading to spikes in their prevalence.

In turn, the phytoplankton are ingested by filter feeders such as mussels, clams and oysters, which are not impacted by the toxin but accumulate it in their flesh. Then, when a human consumes the impacted shellfish, they are unable to process the toxin and become ill.

Hunter said that symptoms start within an hour of ingesting affected seafood and can start with tingling in extremities, stomach cramps, vomiting or diarrhea and extend to stroke-like symptoms or inability to breathe, depending on the volume of toxin ingested. There is no treatment for the condition, but those who are affected should go to a hospital for monitoring. The current outbreak at the Oregon coast began in late May, with the first warning coming when six people fell sick shortly after consuming shellfish on the Sunday before Memorial Day.

Officials from ODFW conduct regular testing of mussels and razor clams on the coast for both saxitoxin and domoic acid, but Hunter said that the speed at which levels increased outpaced the testing. Samples are colleted every ten days when tides are low and transported to a lab in Wilsonville, where it takes about five days tor results to become available.

However, in the current outbreak, Hunter said that levels of saxitoxin detected in mussels at Cape Meares were 75 times higher in mussels given to the department by one of the people who fell ill than in those gathered five days before by department staff from the same rock. Hunter said that this meant the bloom had occurred so quickly and with such intensity that the increase in saxitoxin on each day would have been sufficient to cause sickness.

After receiving word of the outbreak, department staff sprang into action, dispersing across the coast to gather samples from various species of shellfish.

This temporarily led to the closure of harvesting for mussels, bay and razor clams, and oysters on the entire College members gathered at the school's 3rd Street campus on the afternoon of June 21, for a groundbreaking ceremony for the college's new $23.8 million healthcare education building.

The new building, scheduled for completion by the end of September 2025, will house the college's new nursing program and provide additional space for healthcare occupation training programs.

Funding for the project is coming from two primary sources, the first a $14.4 million bond approved by Tillamook County voters in November 2022 and the second an $8 million award from the Oregon Legislature. The balance of the funding is coming courtesy of a $1.4 million bond premium.

The new building will be situated to the south of the college's main building and consist of 28,000 square feet spread across two floors. The first floor will house a nursing skills lab, EMT classroom and large meeting room that will be available for community events, while the second floor will host more classrooms and a new administrative suite for the college.

College (TBCC) began its nursing program at the beginning of this year with 18 students and is designed to be completed in 18 months. Opsis Architecture designed the building with feedback from faculty, staff, students and community members, and Wenaha Group will be managing the project.

At the groundbreaking, TBCC President Paul Jarrell welcomed attendees and thanked community members who had helped to consummate the project, including past President Ross Tomlin, the college's board of directors, TBCC Foundation Chair Michael Weissenfluh, Dean of Nursing Tiffany Slover, members of the Yes for TBCC political action committee and all the college's employees.

Tomlin then took over the microphone and told the crowd about the project's history, which dates to 2018 when the college's staff met at the Tillamook Creamery for a brainstorming

Tillamook Bay Trails Coalition takes collaborative approach to recreation infrastructure

WILL CHAPPELL Headlight Editor

A group of governments and other organizations from around Tillamook Bay have come together to form the Tillamook Trails Coalition, with an eye towards coordinating efforts to enhance recreational opportunities in the area.

Dan Haag, the Tillamook Coast Visitors Association's director of trails, is spearheading the effort and said that the group is working to assess the local trail inventory and will soon be gathering community input.

Haag came up with the idea of forming a coalition last fall, after meeting a member of a similar coalition in Sisters at an Oregon Trailkeeper's conference. Haag had been working on an inventory of trails and recreational assets across the county for a year and a half prior to that meeting and said that the idea of a coalition immediately struck him as a good way to address challenges facing groups trying to build trails in Tillamook.

According to Haag, the biggest challenge facing governments and other groups that want to build trails is a lack of resources and fierce competition for those scarce dollars. Haag said that by forming the coalition members would stop competing against each other for the same grants and that the organizations awarding those grants liked to see interagency coopera-

"The idea is for these organizations that we pooled together to get together and look at potential project we might want to work on in terms of trails," Haag said.

The coalition is starting with a focus on the area around Tillamook Bay north of Bay City up to Rockaway Beach and the initial members are the Tillamook Coast Visitors Association, Port of Tillamook Bay, Port of Garibaldi, the Tillamook County Pioneer Museum, Tillamook County Wellness and Parks Department, the cities of Rockaway Beach and Bay City, and the Oregon Coast Scenic Railroad.

The coalition held its first meeting in early June, at which it discussed what the organization should look like and how they could collaborate.

Haag said that currently the member organizations are working on inventories of their ongoing projects and outstanding grant applications. The coalition will then host a series of listening sessions to solicit public input on the coalition's direction.

Haag said that while he expects the coalition to grow and partner with other groups, like the Oregon Trailkeepers and Salmonberry Trail Foundation, in the future, the group is starting small to make sure it doesn't overreach.

"I think we have the right initial players at the table here, so it's really to see it come together," Haag said.

Tillamook local crowned Oregon Dairy Princess Ambassador

Headlight Editor

Tillamook local Mackenzie Mitchell was named the 2025 Oregon Dairy Princess Ambassador by the Oregon Dairy Women in March and has since been travelling the state promoting the dairy industry.

Mitchell said that she hopes to increase young peoples' understanding of the industry and advocate for its interests with local and state leaders.

Born in Linden, Washington, Mitchell moved to Tillamook in seventh grade and graduated from Tillamook High School in 2020, before matriculating at Tillamook Bay Community College. She is studying political science and plans to transfer to Corbin University in Salem after finishing her associate's degree for a bachelor's in political science, before attending Willamette University for law school.

Mitchell said that she is interested in studying environmental law and hopes to stay in the state and be involved in advocating for agricultural interests with state legislators.

"I'm interested in staying in Oregon, working a lot with our state legislature to make sure that we're passing laws that are helping our agricultural community," Mitchell said. "Because right now it seems that our representatives don't always have a very big background when it comes to agriculture, and so they need someone who's kind of pushing for the bills they should be voting on rather than the things that are going to hurt our farmers.

Mitchell started down the path towards the Dairy Princess Ambassador position by competing in Future Farmers of America competitions in high school, showing heifers and honing her public speaking skills.

Last year, she was selected by the Tillamook County Dairy Women to serve as the 2024 Tillamook County Dairy Princess.

As her tenure in that position was drawing to a close this March, Mitchell traveled to Salem for the Oregon Dairy Farmers Association annual convention. Over two days, Mitchell participated in subject matter and personal interviews, delivered a speech and attended other events where she mingled with judges making the

"You're judged on everything," Michell said. "The judges will look at you the entire time, you're essentially always on as the princess, and so they're looking for your etiquette, just how you speak to other people, how social you are, your networking capabilities."

At the end of the convention, Mitchell was crowned the 65th Oregon Dairy Princess Ambassador. while Rebecca Noordam of Marion County was named Alternate Oregon Dairy Princess Ambassador.

"As soon as I was selected, I was just like, I don't know, on cloud nine is I guess the only way to put it, and it still hasn't fully sunk in," Mitchell said of her selection.

As Oregon Dairy Princess Ambassador, Mitchell is receiving a stipend from the Oregon Dairy Women and travelling the state to increase knowledge and awareness about the indus-

During the spring, Mitchell's efforts were focused on outreach to schoolchildren as she traveled to Irrigon and Pendleton to host farm to market events for grade schoolers.

"Those are always a lot of fun because you're getting to educate kids from a young age and that's the best way to do it is get them interested about the dairy industry, educate them on where their food comes from," Mitchell said.

This summer her focus has shifted to fairs and other events, attending the Tillamook Dairy Days this past weekend with plans to go to the Tillamook, Malheur, Coos, Klamath and state fairs, among others.

In addition to continuing educational efforts in the fall and winter, Mitchell will also have opportunities to meet with state and local leaders to discuss issues facing the industry, with Mitchell pointing to rising costs as a major point of concern.

Local volunteer salmon hatcheries celebrate milestones

JERRY MASSEY Headlight Herald Guest Article

Dodging rain and hailstorms blowing through on the morning of June 15, the Nestucca Anglers celebrated by hosting their 25th Annual Salmon Fin Clip Day.

The Rhoades Pond Rearing facility is operated by the dedicated volunteers from Nestucca Anglers Association that raise and release around 100,000 fall run Chinook Salmon annually. The salmon fry had their adipose fin removed to indicate they are hatchery fish and will be released by the ODFW Cedar Creek Hatchery staff later this summer.

Fin clippers ranged from the young to seniors working elbow to elbow at the clip table, clipping each fish one at a time before they were returned to the rearing pond. Volunteers came from as far away as Astoria, Portland and Salem to participate in the family event. Each participant received a commemorative T-Shirt and raffle tickets. A BBQ lunch was provided to all. All youngsters received a fishing pole or backpack full of surprises.

A silent auction was held and the record setting proceeds generated will help with operational costs to run the facility.

Nestucca Anglers Association President Ron Byrd said, "This annual event could not take place without the hundreds of volunteer hours spent raising these Chinook Salmon" and he thanked all who partici-

Improved hearing experience at two Tillamook County attractions

Tillamook Creamery and Tillamook Air Museum roll out "hearing loops"

Tillamook Coast Visitors Association (TCVA) has funded the installation of hearing loops at two locations in Tillamook County: the visitors center desk at the Tillamook Creamery, and the front desk at the Tillamook Air Museum. Tillamook Creamery has also purchased an additional three hearing loops for their retail, ice cream and café areas.

"We're excited to add new hearing loops at the Tillamook Creamery visitors center, which will help us connect with our millionplus annual visitors, some of whom are in the hearing loss community," said Deanna Hirt, Director of Direct Commerce at Tillamook County Creamery Association. "We continue to expand our support resources for guests with visible and non-visible disabilities to ensure that the Creamery is a welcoming space for all."

Installed by Alan Anttila of Hearing Support Solutions in Eugene, the hearing loops are an assistive technology that allows people with hearing aids and cochlear implants to better hear and understand one-on-one conversations and instructions. The technology has been used around Oregon at hotel front desks, performing arts centers, airports and other attractions where there can be a lot of disruptive and overwhelming background

"These two locations were excellent choices for TCVA to introduce this technology in Tillamook County," said Dan Haag, Director of Trails, Outdoor Recreation, and Accessibility. "Both buildings have large, wide open spaces where people with hearing issues can feel lost in the hustle and bustle of big crowds and noise. We are extremely grateful to the Air Museum and the Creamery for supporting this accessibility

A hearing loop helps people who use hearing aids that are equipped with T-coils to hear sound directly and clearly in their hearing aids, because it reduces or cuts out the background noise. It provides a magnetic wireless signal that is picked up by the hearing aid when it is set to the "T" (T-coil) setting. The loop system consists of a microphone to pick up the spoken word; an amplifier which processes the signal which is then sent through the final component; the loop cable, which is a wire placed around the perimeter of a room to act as an antenna that radiates the magnetic signal to the hearing aids.

"I was intimidated when I first saw the additional hardware added to our admissions desk," said Air Museum employee Dennis Shelter. "But after learning about how it works and how easy it is to use both for the end-user and myself as staff, it's great!"

Air Museum executive director Rita Welch says that customers have been appreciative of the new addition.

"We had a guest say how cool it was and he had never seen or used one before," she said. "It's going to be greatly appreciated by visitors and staff alike."

Anttila installed the devices in late May, and they are up and running in time for the busy season. A hearing aid user of 12 years, he compares the sensation of being in a crowded building that echoes, to being physically battered. The hearing loops help bring some normalcy to people who need extra assistance, like asking for directions.

"I didn't always have hearing loss," Anttila said. "I am now dedicating my time to helping the world become more accessible to people with hearing loss through the installation of hearing loops.'

Anttila also provided Air Museum and Creamery staff with training on operating the hearing loops after installa-

Tillamook Beekeepers promote National Pollination Week

National Pollination Week was celebrated across the US during the week of June 17-23, 2024.

Pollinator Week is an annual celebration in support of pollinator health designed to promote the health of pollinators, critical to food and ecosystems, through conservation, education, and research. It is a time to raise awareness for pollinators and spread the word about what we can do to protect them.

To help promote pollination and Pollination Week, the Tillamook Beekeepers Association created a magnificent Children's Pollinator Sensory Garden to promote pollination and demonstrate how a simple garden can both thrill children and teach gardening in a fun and stimulating way. This new children's pollinator sensory garden is located adjacent to the apiary where a dozen beehives are maintained. The apiary and the garden area are all open to the public. Families, groups, clubs, and schools are all welcome to visit. For those wishing a real pollinator experience and would like to see what goes on inside a beehive, we can dress you in bee suits and veils and dive deep into the hives to see up close and personal what the honeybees are doing. Contact us for an appointment. (719)-896-0000 or dradleyyork@gmail.

The Children's Sensory Garden features the five human senses with pollinator friendly plants, flowers, and herbs. Four beautiful, raised garden boxes 2' x 8' and roughly 24 inches high create the boundaries of this garden. Taste is a garden box that has a delicious variety of edible plants. Smell is a garden box with fragrant plants and flowers. Vision is a garden box just for beauty. The Touch garden box has plants that are just fun to feel. Hearing is simply a wind chime hanging on the entrance arbor leading into the garden. At either end of the garden are two bean pole teepees. When the beans have fully grown, children are welcome to sit within and enjoy the beauty of the garden. A sturdy wooden bench provides a full view of the apiary and all the bee activity and companion plantings.

Materials for this project were generously provided by Rosenberg's Builders Supply, Averill Landscaping, and Stimpson Lumber.

Manzanita should pay for share of water

The Wheeler and Manzanita City Councils will meet soon to discuss changing the IGA (Intergovernmental agreement) which began 20 years ago and has been updated 2 times. This time the Conservation of the Water Aquifer owned by Wheeler. the councils are trying to lower Wheeler's U.S. leading water rate from being in line with Mananzita. Currently, Wheeler's lowest average rate is $76.07 while Manzanita's is $47.56 a month.

Wheeler council had a workshop this past June 5th. I have been recommending the sharing of the system as it was originally intended. Until now, the importance of water usage, either paid, shared or exploited was not considered. But now with the Mananzita expected growth, Wheeler's high water rates and Manzanita has been taking approximately 100 million gallons while Wheeler is been taking a little over 21 million, sharing and conservation are at odds. It has been my suggestiion to each city have their share of 20 millions gallons and after that a dollar amount per 1000 gallons would be paid into a fund and then the funds would be split at the end of the year.

Manzanita has been making approximately $900,000 a year for free water for the past 20 years. It is time to share the resources equally. I call it the 20/20 Water Sharing Plan which I encourage both city councils and Wheeler Citizens endorse the plan to save Wheeler. A stronger Wheeler is good for the Nehalem Valley Community.

Gardening Matters: Portland plants

I was staying with family in Portland earlier this month and since I love walking the neighborhoods, I leashed up the dog several times daily and we went on a stroll. Portland is known for being The Rose City, and I was not disappointed with the wide variety of roses in front gardens that I would see on my walks. One was a peach shade that smelled like oranges. How special to be able to pass that sweet scent every time you returned home from a day's

Many gardeners and rose lovers have made a pilgrimage to the Portland International Rose Test Garden in Washington Park. But there is an equally fabulous - and in my case more easily accessible - Rose Garden at Peninsula Park in the Northeast quadrant of the city. Upon approaching this garden, you can tell you are getting closer by the sweet aroma of roses in the air. And the view of this sunken rose garden is spectacular. Going down the steps and into the garden only enhances that view and the aroma. For the true rose aficionado, this is a must-stop on your Portland itinerary

But on my walks, I also relished the wide variety of other plants that creative gardeners had chosen for their yards. I knew many of them, like Echinacea, Heuchera, Hosta and Euphorbia. But there were several times when I would pull out my phone, head to the Plant Net app and snap a photo for ID.

One such plant had tall inflorescences of mauve flowers, and, when planted in masses like one particular gardener did, made a very dramatic statement. I was curious about this plant and its potential to grow in my coastal garden. On Plant Net, I identified it as a narrow-leaved Valerian. But when I went to the internet later to explore this plant further, all I got were photos of a plant that looked nothing like the ones I saw.

What did I do? I returned to Plant Net to find the botanical name and that was much more successful. Searching Centranthus lecoqii brought me to the plants I had seen in Portland. And the description was better when it said it was clump-forming, bushy and semi-evergreen. Blooming from late spring to late summer, this plant would be a real workhorse in the garden. It is considered to be a Mediterranean valerian and, as such, loves a warm, dry climate. Full sun and well-drained are imperative growing conditions. Oh, and this is a great plant to attract pollinators.

Interestingly enough, most of the websites I found that mentioned this plant were from the UK. Prices quoted in pounds were a sure give-away. I did find seeds of the Red Jupiter's Beard (Centranthus ruber) online, also called Ped Volerian also called Red Valerian.

As I looked further, it seems C. ruber easily self-seeds so be careful where this is planted. One website remarked that the older clumps may stop flowering after 3 or 4 years and might need replacing. But considering the ease with which the plants self-sow, this may not be an issue. When dormant, the clumps can be divided carefully but why bother when it so easily grows from seed?

Since this plant likes full sun, I thought it might not work in my mostly shade garden. But I found a C. ruber at Bluestone Perennials and they say it will grow in half sun/half shade. They consider it a good plant for beginners because of its ease in growing. But don't let that stop you if you are an experienced gardener.

Afterall, don't experienced gardeners need something easy to grow once in a while?

Merkley Monthly: Tackling the housing affordability crisis

JEFF MERKLEY Headlight Herald Guest Column

June is National Homeownership Month, but the housing affordability crisis is putting home ownership farther and farther out of reach for too many working families in Oregon and across America.

When I was growing up, my parents, like many of their generation, were able to save enough money to buy a modest home for our family in Oregon. I still live in that same blue-collar neighborhood. But it's a different story for my children's generation. As prices to rent and buy skyrocket, young people are worried that they will never be homeowners. Today, too many folks are struggling to find a safe and affordable place to call home, while too many others have been forced into homelessness. This is unacceptable and unsustainable.

Economists estimate that Oregon is short 140,000 homes today – and we'll need to build at least 500,000 new homes within the next 20 years just to keep up with demand. So, it was terrific to see our state legislature recently pass $376 million to boost housing production in addition to the federal dollars I'm bringing home to Oregon to help.

Housing is vital for our economy. Every year, I host town halls in all 36 Oregon counties. Up and down the coast and across the state, I hear about the urgent need for more workforce housing.

COURTESY PHOTO

Companies tell communities they won't bring their businesses to town without available housing for their employees, but housing developers say they won't build new homes without knowing that new businesses are coming with employees to buy or rent them. It's a classic Catch-22 with our coastal and rural communities caught in the middle.

That's why, as Oregon's representative on the U.S. Senate Appropriations Committee, which funds the federal government, I'm pushing to invest in housing programs. Here are a few quick examples. In March, we passed funding for fiscal year 2024, which included $1.6 billion for national rental assistance funding, $48 million for Rural Housing Service Vouchers across the country, and $12 million to support home-building non-profits, like Habitat for Humanity. Additionally, Oregon has received $90 million this year from the U.S. Treasury's Homeowner Assistance Fund.

But we can't only treat the effects of the housing crisis – we also need to go after those profiting off sky-high housing prices.

For generations, the greatest wealth builder for the American middle class has been homeownership. Now, the powerful millionaires and billionaires who run hedge funds want to take that slice of the American pie away from working families and put it on their own over-flowing plates. In 2021, investors bought nearly 17,000 homes in Oregon homes that should have gone to families. It's a similar story all across the country. That same year, in just one area of Atlanta, hedge funds bought more than 40 percent of the homes for sale. Hedge funds often make all cash, no inspection offers. Working families can't compete with that!

That's why I've introduced the End Hedge Fund Control of American Homes Act. It will kick hedge funds out of the housing market and require them to sell the homes they own to working folks because houses should be homes for families, not profit centers for hedge funds.

Early in my career, I helped build homes with Habitat for Humanity because I saw every day how lives were changed for the better when folks could afford a decent home in a decent community. So, I'll keep up the fight for affordable homes for working families in Oregon and across the country.

his isn't the first I time the Gordons' residence has seemed like Wildlife Safari. But last time it was only one bear, chasing off deer and trying to get honey from a beehive. This time it was two black bears. Mary Gordon reminds neighbors to carry their bear bells when walking in the woods nearby. And if you see a bear cub, go the opposite way. You don't want to get between a mama bear and her baby.

There must have been some mojo in that old salmon fishing equipment that the Thompsons gave to their neighbor, Tom Lust. Tom has caught two spring

Chinook on Jerry and Sonya's vintage rods and reels. The same morning as Tom's second springer, neighbor Nick Ostroff bagged a salmon as well. Great hearing about these Cape Meares success stories. Tight lines to all those still out there as the season nears its end.

A press release regarding the South Jetty repair project notes jetty armor stone continues to be stockpiled at the Port of Garibaldi, and stone is also now being transported across the bay by barge to Kincheloe Point. The contractor expects stone placement on the jetty to begin soon, starting at the east (landward) end of the jetty and progressing west (seaward). The date for the first stones being placed is expected to be between June 24 and July 8. We are all looking forward to this repair that will help prevent beach erosion and make the entrance to Tillamook Bay safer.

"This is not a prop," announces a new sign at the Bayocean Road access to Cape Meares beach. The sign is posted near a fire hydrant. "This is a real fire hydrant," the wording continues. "It protects the houses you see around you, the people who live in or stay in them temporarily, and the visitors to our beach. Please don't park in front of it." Wildfire season has already begun; this warning is important. Check the Cape Meares Community Association's website for fire prevention and preparation tips (https://capemeares.org/emergency-preparedness/ structure-fire/), and mark your calendar for a Sept. 14 presentation about wildfire at the Barbara Bennett Community Center.

Man, are we jealous. A humongous, rare fish washed ashore in Gearhart earlier this month. It was a 7.3-foot hoodwinker sunfish. Pictures show the massive, flat, round, gray fish lying on its side on the seashore, with people and vehicles in the pictures for scale. Keep your eyes peeled, beachgoers. One never knows what will wash ashore. The most recent find on Cape Meares beach was a dead sea lion, first reported in our neighborhood group on the social media site MeWe on June 6. The latest news report

I've seen says 31 individuals have been sickened by paralytic shellfish poisoning (PSP) from eating shellfish harvested from the Oregon coast during Memorial Day weekend and after. Just a reminder that our entire coast (and part of Washington's, too) is closed to some shellfish harvesting due to this serious toxin. Crabbing remains open and razor clamming has just reopened, but this can change daily. Check the Shellfish Hotline at 800-448-2474 before heading out for one of these activities.

So, the first thing most folks are wondering: How is the new city manager search coming along?

Well, I wasn't in the room this time, but I can safely report there were four interviews from a good group of candidates.

Furthermore, I'm told if the fates continue to align, we might possibly have even better news to report in the next couple weeks regarding the search.

Here's to hoping I didn't jinx anything, again.

I also have good news to report regarding Garibaldi Days. In January I noted that Martin McCormick was chosen by Mayor Katie to be the next Garibaldi Days Grand Marshal. I can now report (if editor Chappell didn't beat me to it in this edition) that Mayor Katie took her pick to council at the last meeting and got their endorsement. Katie then went to "triple confirm" with Martin, who accepted the honor.

I'm currently scheduling interviews with him and his awesome wife, Myra, and will have something out soon.

In addition, the logo and T-shirt designs are in their final tweaking stage. The folks leading the charge of planning the event approved a concept with only minor edits remaining. I'm told the shirts this year will be more charcoal – which textually

GARIBALDI NATHAN "FINN"

finn@natfinn.com

would be more synonymous with the jetty rocks. And construction dust. Always thinking, they are.

I'm still arguing for a small re-issue of the 2023 shirts, but so far, I'm losing that good fight.

This is the part where our favorite local librarian would chime in with a good note, but next week she'll be out all week. I ask you all to join me in wishing June good health and a timeless adventure during her muchdeserved break.

Mayor Katie and I have talked to a few businesses who have cited a downward trend in seasonal activity vs. years past. Some of it likely has to do with a good chunk of parking currently used to store rocks. Some of it likely comes from the press around pending construction. The biggest chunk likely comes from all the camping spots affected by renovations. COVID is back on the rise along the coast. A few

Katie reminds me that the city and the port are working with Visit Tillamook Coast during the "pardon our dust" campaign. Part of the campaign will include a "we're open" component from a variety of mediums. Now, that won't help businesses in any way until the campaign is released, it is a step in the right direction.

Katie is looking to conduct a town hall workshop when the campaign is fully flushed out and when ODOT has a timeline to present.

Any businesses with a question for Katie regarding the campaign in the meantime is recommended to contact her via city hall. Feedback is encouraged.

Lastly, on a personal note. We got so caught up in managerial searches and client work and helping family friends with things that it took one of my groomsmen back home sending me a picture of us during my wedding to remind me that last Thursday was my church wedding anniversary with mayor Katie. He ribbed me good enough that the "Ferris Bueller" quote has been rattling in my head

"Life moves pretty fast. If you don't stop and look around once in a while, you could miss it.'

Long to short: Happy Anniversary, Katie.

Tillamook. Tickets are on

Here's a list of a few things for visitors and locals alike to enjoy over the upcoming weeks:

This Thursday, June 27, the second annual summer picnic for persons and families living with intellectual and developmental disabilities (ID/DD) takes place in Phyllis Baker City Park. From 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., picnickers will enjoy karaoke, basketball, face painting, raffle prizes, a photo booth and more. Hamburgers and hot dogs will be provided.

Last year's picnic
brought so much joy to participants. We live just a few blocks from the park and the sound of songs, laughter, and delight floated over the neighborhood throughout the summer afternoon. I'm looking forward to talking with the organizers this year to share the good they're doing for the community in a future Fencepost.

The biggest news of the summer is our annual Fourth of July celebration. Organizations, businesses, and residents have already started decorating for the contest, and floats are under construction for the parade. One new group you'll see in the parade: the Rockaway Beach Bicycle Brigade, sponsored by the Rockaway Beach Citizens for Biking and the Salmonberry Trail Foundation.

The parade will begin at 11 a.m. and is scheduled to conclude at noon on Thursday, July 4.

Other festivities on the Fourth will include a live auction at the Wayside, building on last year's successful revival of a tradition put on hold in 2020. Residents and businesses alike are invited to donate auction prizes. The Chamber of Commerce's Community Education is the charitable arm which allows writing off your donations.

off your donations.

Last year's auction prizes included baskets of wine and cheese, gift certificates from local businesses, weekend getaways, and more.

The Rockaway Renaissance Artists group is planning to contribute a certificate for face painting at a child's birthday party, building on the popular activity at the Thursday Artisan Farmers Market.

If you have products or services you would like to contribute to the auction, contact Chamber Vice-President Kim Tackett at (503) 887-1900, or stop in at Simply Charming, 130 Hwy 101 N, to arrange for your donation.

donation.

The annual Friends of the Library Fourth of July Book Sale will be held Saturday, July 6 from 10 a.m.—3 p.m. Hardbacks are $2 (6 for $10), and paperbacks are $1 (8 for $10). The book sale is the Friends of the Library's largest fundraiser, and you can also make a donation and become a member there. All proceeds go towards the upkeep of the library building, located at 120 N Coral Street

Also on Saturday, July 6, the Meals for Seniors program is holding its French Toast breakfast from 8 a.m.—noon at St. Mary's by the Sea, 275 S Pacific. These events are a fun and delicious way to visit with friends and neighbors and support this important program.

One addition to the Thursday Market is an expanded Sidewalk Sale, the first Thursday of every month. Businesses along Highway 101 will have tables on the sidewalk with unique and appealing offerings, including lunch specials for restaurants who participate. This idea arose out of a comment from the owners of Upper Crust Pizza last year, when they said, "Thursday is our new Friday." The influx of visitors to Rockaway, in the words of Chamber co-secretary Debra Reeves, has "let the energy spill out beyond the Wayside." Sidewalk Sale dates are August 1, September 5, and October 3, from 3—7 p.m.

Looking ahead to August, the Rockaway Beach Annual Art Festival returns to the Wayside from August 2 through 4. Presented in conjunction with the Rockaway Renaissance Artists, this event will feature art works and crafts from local and traveling creators. The festival runs noon—6 p.m. on Friday, August 2, from 10 a.m.—6 p.m. on Saturday, August 3, and from 10 a.m.—2 p.m. on Sunday, August 4.

Vendors can sign up for a display booth at https:// rockawaybeach.net. Click on the Events tab at the top of the page, then select the Arts & Crafts Fair link from the drop-down menu.

Kyler is survived by his mother Gengee Ramirez; father Dennis Cavitt; sisters Kayla and Kitt Cavitt; stepfather Jose Inez Ramirez; stepmother Amanda Cavitt, grandparents, Kenneth Smith, Bob and Carol Cavitt, and Linda Wall; and his loving aunts, uncles, and cousins.

He was a person of great kindness. Firstborn and the oldest of three, Kyler's best friend was his younger sister Kayla. They were one year apart and inseparable from the beginning. He was also the epitome of the 'big brother protector' to his youngest sister Kitt.

His family was what he was most proud of. It was his anchor and his compass. Great son. Wonderful grandchild. Supportive cousin. The embodiment of the "Best Big Brother." The world just felt a little safer and a little more comforting with him in it.

During Kyler's short life, he excelled in football and baseball, and broke records in weightlifting. He was a prolific gamer, an outdoorsman, and the best cookie baker.

Kyler was excited to have begun his career in carpentry. He dreamt of settling down on the Oregon coast and having a family of his own someday.

Since his passing, the stories people have shared have been a great sense of comfort. They are all tales of his good nature, his special sense of humor, and just how great he made people feel.

Kyler truly lived every moment to its fullest and touched so many lives.

And he will continue to touch many more lives because Kyler was an organ donor. It was important to him to contribute in this way, as his uncle and grandfather were organ recipients. To know that he lives on in this way is of great honor to us, his family.

We would like to thank everyone who sent their condolences and to those that have already contributed to Kyler's memorial fund.

May you rest in peace, our beloved son.

PTSD Awareness: Understanding, Treatment and Support

CHRISTOPHER KRUEBBE Headlight Herald Guest Column

Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) is a significant mental health condition that affects millions of people worldwide. As a licensed clinical social worker and certified alcohol and drug counselor, I have seen firsthand the profound impact PTSD can have on individuals' lives. At Adventist Health Tillamook, I, along with my therapy dog, Quinn, strive to offer compassionate care and effective treatment to those struggling with PTSD and other mental health challenges.

PTSD is often associated with military veterans, but it affects many others as well. According to the National Center for PTSD, approximately 7–8% of the U.S. population will experience PTSD at some point in their lives. This statistic highlights the importance of broadening our awareness and understanding of this condition. PTSD can result from various traumatic events, including natural disasters, serious accidents, terrorist acts, sudden death of a loved one, and physical or sexual assault.

Symptoms of PTSD can be debilitating and include

intrusive memories, avoidance behaviors, negative changes in thinking and mood, and changes in physical and emotional reactions. These symptoms can disrupt daily life, making it challenging for individuals to function normally. It is crucial to recognize these signs and seek professional help early.

Effective treatment for PTSD is available, and early intervention can greatly improve outcomes. Therapy is one of the most effective approaches, with methods like cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT) helping patients change negative thought patterns and behaviors. Eye movement desensitization and reprocessing (EMDR) helps patients process traumatic memories and reduce emotional distress. Another innovative therapy, accelerated resolution therapy (ART), combines elements of CBT and EMDR to quickly and effectively help patients reframe their traumatic experiences and alleviate symptoms. In my practice, I have seen how ART can bring significant relief to those suffering from PTSD.

In addition to these therapies, canine-assisted intervention has proven to be a valuable adjunct to traditional treatment methods. Therapy dogs, like Quinn, offer unconditional support and companionship, helping to reduce anxiety and create a calming environment for therapy. The presence of a therapy dog can also encourage patients to engage more fully in their treatment, fostering a sense of safety and trust.

Beyond individual therapy, community support is vital in managing PTSD. Support groups provide a platform for individuals to share their experiences and connect with others who understand their struggles. These groups can reduce feelings of isolation and promote healing through shared experiences.

PTSD is a pervasive condition that requires our collective awareness and action. By understanding the symptoms, promoting effective treatments, and supporting those affected, we can make a significant difference in the lives of individuals with PTSD. Together, we can create a more empathetic and supportive community for everyone. If vou or someone vou know is struggling with PTSD, do not hesitate to seek help. Your mental health is a priority, and support is available.

Christopher Kruebbe, LCSW, CADCI, CAIS, is a licensed clinical social worker and certified alcohol and drug counselor at Adventist Health Tillamook. Specializing in canineassisted intervention with his therapy dog, Quinn, Christopher addresses mental health challenges like PTSD, depression, anxiety, ADHD, bipolar conditions, dissociative identity, and substance misuse. Outside of his clinical work, he enjoys outdoor activities, record collecting, and community volunteering, enhancing mental health through human-animal intervention.

Women's preventive health care across the lifespan

LEANNA COY Headlight Herald Guest Article

The term women's health covers more than just pap smears and mammograms. This category of healthcare has a wide scope covering care for people with a uterus from menstruation to pregnancy and osteoporosis, along with all of the health screenings in between. Women's health aims at improving health over the lifespan with treatments and screenings beginning in the teen years and spanning the rest of a person's life. The terminology for the women's health category is evolving to recognize transgender and non-binary people. The women's health category is inclusive for all people based on anatomy, not gender identity.

An ounce of prevention

One of the best things a person can do to take care of themselves is get routine screenings. Ideally, everyone should check in with their healthcare provider annually for a well check, but other screenings vary by age and circumstance. Routine health screenings serve to detect warning signs of potential health issues before they become serious problems. This allows the medical provider to work with the person on getting any needed treatment. Health screenings also help catch medical conditions early, which makes them easier to treat.

The typical preventative visit includes:

- Depression and suicide risk assessment.
- High blood pressure screening.
- Tobacco use screening and counseling for quitting. This includes vaping and chewing.
- Unhealthy alcohol use screening. The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism recommends women have no more than seven drinks in a week and no more than three drinks in one day.
- Overweight or obesity assessment.

Additional adolescent screenings

Parents sometimes stop well-child checks when their kids become teens, but really they shouldn't. When pre- teens begin noticing physical changes, a healthcare provider can help answer questions and discuss expectations for developing bodies. This is also the transition into adulthood with health screenings. All the above screenings become relevant. Additionally, the potential for sexual activity in teens also must be addressed. Things that may begin screening in adoles-

• When someone becomes sexually active, they need screening for sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) at least once a year and with every partner change. In Oregon, chlamydia and gonorrhea are the most common STDs with syphilis on the rise.

- Counseling for STDs. • Screening for the Hu-

- Over age 30 testing with pap smear and for high-risk human papillomavirus (HPV).
- Screening for diabetes in overweight or obese people who don't have symptoms starting at age 35.
- · Breast cancer screening for the average at-risk person beginning at age 40.
- Colorectal cancer screenings now start at age

- Screening for hepatitis B at the first prenatal visit.
- Gestational diabetes screening and healthy weight gain counseling during pregnancy.

Older adult

Older, wiser, and still getting health screenings. The older adult stops getting cervical cancer screenings after age 65 if they have been cancer free. STD screenings may continue as needed. A discussion with the healthcare provider may lead to discontinuation of colorectal and breast cancer screenings in 70 to 80-yearolds based on prior history and risk factors.

COMMITTEE road tour stops in Tillamook

shortages at the department. Strickler thanked the legislators for the infusion of $19 late last year, which he said had been critical to allowing them to deliver the level of service Oregonians expect during the winter months.

Savannah Crawford, director of ODOT's region two that includes Tillamook, then took over as the bus continued on its way towards milepost 10 of the Wilson River Highway.

Crawford discussed how the culvert routing Zig Zag creek under the highway at that point was failing and noted that it would need to be replaced by a bridge that will cost $14-16 million. The culvert is almost a century old, like many others along Highway 6, and maintaining them is an ongoing challenge for the department.

On the way back towards Tillamook, Crawford talked about safety issues on the highway and the study that was commissioned by State Senator Suzanne Weber to delineate them. Crawford said that the highway had seen 428 vehicle crashes between 2016 and 2020, which led Weber to sponsor a bill funding the study in 2022.

That study, conducted in 2023, detailed a range of options for upgrading safety on the highway from initiatives like restriping the highway for extra visibility all the way up to adding passing lanes. Crawford said that restriping would cost an estimated $7 to $9 million, while adding passing lanes would cost between $45 and $133 million and stabilizing a selection of high priority slopes at risk of slides between mileposts 28 and 37 would run $50 million.

The tour then made a brief stop at the weigh station outside Tillamook where Strickler discussed the work of ODOT's commerce and compliance division, which is responsible for running weigh stations and checking for chain compliance in winter months.

The bus then headed north to Garibaldi, where the committee members exited the bus for a short presentation on the soon-to-begin project there.

Bill Jablonski, director of ODOT's area one, said that the $10 million project would see a complete overhaul of Highway 101 between First and 12th streets in the city. In addition to repaving the roadway, new sidewalks featuring ADAaccessible crossings, street lighting and six new transit stops will be added during the project, which is scheduled to start later this summer.

The committee then returned to the red barn for a roundtable with local officials, after which the committee reconvened at the Port of Tillamook Bay in the evening to hear public comment about transportation needs on the north coast.

Several dozen commenters addressed the committee over the course of one and a half hours and several major themes arose across comments.

Representatives of the trucking industry requested that the committee fund promised projects in Portland's Rose Quarter and on Oregon 217 and interstate 205, telling the committee members that those projects were critical to their industry.

A Columbia County Commissioner, the Lincoln County Public Works director and several commenters rose to speak in favor of the current funding model that sees 50% of road funding directed to ODOT, 30% to counties and 20% to cities.

As the department faces funding challenges from decreasing revenues, there have been discussions about directing a larger proportion towards ODOT. But the commenters all emphasized the importance of the funding to rural counties tasked with maintaining extensive road networks without a large property tax base.

A handful of Tillamook locals addressed the committee and voiced their support for the Salmonberry Trail, the proposed 82-mile, rails-totrails path that would connect Tillamook to Banks. Commenters asked the committee to continue funding grants, like the community pathways grant, that could be used to support construction of portions of the trail.

Tillamook County Transportation District General Manager Brian Vitulli and Board of Directors Chair Mary Johnson asked that the committee continue funding the statewide transportation improvement fund at the same levels, noting that it supported the district's operations.

Other floated a mixed-use path connecting Tillamook, Netarts and Oceanside, extolled the virtues of the state's rest areas and asked that their funding be maintained, asked for alternate means for counties to raise revenues for public works and pushed for transportation funding to be more distributed based on where people reside, rather than work.

coast. Hunter said that such outbreaks usually did not impact razor clams, but that with the larger number of people harvesting and consuming them compared to mussels, slightly elevated levels of saxitoxin had led ODFW to close their harvest out of an abundance of caution.

Results from a second round of sampling after the outbreak began were released on June 13 and showed that saxitoxin levels had dropped in all species across the coast.

The drop gave ODFW officials confidence to reopen razor clam harvesting on the coast from Yachats to the Washington state line and oyster harvesting in Tillamook and Netarts Bays. Another round of testing results released on June 21, led to the reopening of razor clam harvesting on the entire coast and bay clam harvesting from Cascade Head to the Washington state line.

Currently, mussel harvesting remains closed across the entire coast and bay clam harvesting is closed from Cascade Head to the California border.

Hunter said that the level of saxitoxin in this outbreak was the highest ever recorded by ODFW and that the scope and complexity of the impacts has been "unprecedented."

A new set of samples was gathered over the weekend and test results will be released later this week.

Hunter said he was hopeful that the lower levels in the most recent results indicated that the phytoplankton activity in the fungal bloom had died down but cautioned that the situation could recur if conditions shifted. Hunter noted that the department has a program to monitor saxitoxin levels in coastal waters but said that the position overseeing it had been vacant since shortly before the outbreak.

Hunter also said that even as the phytoplankton's activity subsided, it would take time for the shellfish to process and expel the saxitoxins. Hunter explained that the department's monitoring program relied on homogenized studies that sampled more than 20 individual shellfish per site and that safety thresholds were set at one tenth of the level of saxitoxins that would trigger illness.

Given the multiple layers of complexity, Hunter said that he could not hazard a guess as to when the fisheries would reopen. He said that the next round of sample results had been collected over the weekend and will be released later this week.

Mango & Bilya

United Paws is caring for more than 50 kittens right now, some as young as two weeks. These two darlings, Mango & Bilya, are healthy, happy, and ready for their own homes.

Mango is a ginger tabby with lots of love & kitten energy. He was one of 7 kittens surrendered to United Paws by a local resident living in a tent encampment. Mango will bound across the room, tail and head held high, and greet you like a long- lost friend, even though you were gone briefly! Mango will let you hold him while you do just about anything, but he especially loves to lie on his back in the crook of your arm and relish your gentle belly rubs. Mango is totally lovable and socialized to be a "sleep with my human" cat! He is neutered, vaccinated, chipped, and good with the cat box. He eats wet food along with some crunchies. Bilya is a stunning 9-week-old tabby with exquisite markings. She is very outgoing and loves lots of physical contact with her fosters. Bilya gets along great with the other kittens and cats in her foster home and basically, she is an easy-going girl. She is one of 3 kittens caught at a feral cat colony along with the mom. UP spayed the mom and returned her to the colony and kept the kittens to socialize them for loving homes. Bilya's siblings have already been adopted and she hopes to be next. She will be spayed, vaccinated, chipped, and ready for her new home after July 10. Bilya eats wet food with some crunchies, and is cat-box trained.

If interested in one of these kittens, fill out the application below, or email / call us for more info. Email: unitedpawshelp@gmail.com or 503-842-5663. You must be at least 21 years old to adopt through United Paws.
