Garibaldi Home & Garden Show helps residents prep for spring

Garibaldi's city council approved a separation agreement with City Manager John Schempf on April 15, agreeing to pay him just under $29,000 in exchange for release from potential legal liability.

Council also approved the hiring of Bay City Mayor Liane Welch as city manager pro tem, with a contract period of three months.

The negotiated separation with Schempf came after the city delivered a letter of potential termination for cause on March 22, citing his confrontational style with city councilors, employees and vendors, as well as inaccuracies on his resume.

Schempf responded to the complaints at a meeting on April 2, arguing that the complaints from vendors had come after he had stopped them from taking advantage of the city. He also said that he felt the potential termination was based on a poor performance review received in March and that the reasons cited were pretextual.

A lawyer retained by Schempf also appeared at the meeting and argued that the city's letter did not

The Tillamook Headlight Herald Home & Garden Show took over the Tillamook County Fairgrounds on April 20 and 21, giving residents an opportunity to gear up for spring and summer.

The annual show, co-sponsored by Tillamook County Solid Waste, featured a wide variety of vendors as well as the Tillamook Beekeepers Association's Bee Days celebration. Members of the beekeepers showed off a demonstration hive and sold local honey and pollinator friendly plants from JAndy nurseries. They also hosted a series of short classes on beekeeping throughout the weekend and raffled off a Tillamook cheese block themed hive and other prizes.

In addition to the beekeepers' raffle, the Tillamook Peoples' Utility District (TPUD), Marie Mills and Kiwanis Club of Tillamook also held raffles and the Tillamook County Democrats had free drawings for prizes. TPUD raffled a front loader washer and dryer set from Samsung and the Kiwanis Club's raffle was part of their KT Days Scholarship Drive, with proceeds supporting the group's scholarship program.

Monkey Business 101 and Garden Witch Goods both brought a variety of plants to the show, ranging from flowers to a wide assortment of berries, grapes and fruit trees, and the Oregon Department of Forestry handed out saplings to showgoers.

Tillamook's American Legion Post was on hand, selling handmade, wooden American flags with all proceeds going to benefit their organization.

Pacific Restaurant and Sabor Autentico treated attendees to delicious food and other vendors offered gutter protection, wind-chimes, sweets and much more.

Adventist Health Tillamook announces surgery suite addition, modernization

Adventist Health Tillamook is preparing for an addition to its surgery suite and modernization of existing facilities, with the $16.8-million project set to begin later this year.

The expansion will increase the number of available operating rooms from three to four and greatly improve the unit's capacity by adding additional pre- and post-operative beds. Adventist Health Tillamook President Eric Swanson said that the project was prompted when staff noticed serious foundation settling occurring in part of the suite constructed in 1995.

Currently, there are three operating rooms in the suite, as well as one room that can be used exclusively for scoping procedures. The unit only has three beds apiece for patients preparing for and recovering from surgeries, which

Swanson said leads to delays in moving patients from operating to recovery rooms due to a lack of availability.

The new addition will be built

Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife visits Tillamook

Staffers and commissioners from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife gathered in Tillamook on April 18 and 19, for the commission's regular meeting and to tour project sites across the county.

The day-long tour on the 18th had a theme of rising seas and coastal squeeze and focused on ways to address issues caused by climate change in the strip of land between Oregon's coastal range forests and the ocean.

The tour's first stop was at the Historic U.S. Coast Guard Boat-house in Garibaldi, where several presentations laying the groundwork for the site visits were made.

Dr. Steve Rumrill, the leader of the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife's (ODFW) shellfish program spoke first and gave an overview of the issues facing Oregon's coastal areas as the sea level rises.

Rumrill shared data that showed that Oregon is set to fare better than many other places in the world, with only .14 meters of sea level rise forecast to occur on the state's coast by 2050. That rise is lower than the projected nationwide average rise of .36 meters and world-wide projected rise of .21 meters because of tectonic lifting that is occurring under the coast.

Even with the relatively lower level of sea level rise, there will be significant impacts on coastal habitats, according to Rumrill. He said that as the sea level rises, habitat will either migrate in areas without impediments or be squeezed in areas with roads or other infrastructure preventing migration.

Dr. Tony D'Andrea then discussed ODFW's Shellfish and Estuarine Assessment of Coastal Oregon (SEACOR) program, which monitors estuaries across the state.

Specifically, D'Andrea discussed the monitoring of eelgrass, a seagrass that provides habitat to clams and crab and helps to protect the shoreline from waves and storms. Every decade, SEACOR visits each of Oregon's estuaries and conducts a survey of eelgrass sites to monitor their health and shares the data with state, federal and tribal agencies.

Meg Reed from the Department of Land Conservation and Development then discussed the coast-specific land use goals included in the 1973 law and the department's coastal management program established in 1977.

Dr. Kristi Foster, executive director of the Tillamook Estuaries Partnership (TEP), was the final presenter at the boathouse, giving a general overview of TEP's mission. Formed in the 1990s, TEP aims to promote habitat restoration and clean waters in Tillamook County's estuaries and educate the public about issues facing them.

The group then departed Garibaldi and headed for the site of the Southern Flow Corridor project in Tillamook on Godspeed Road, where York Johnson, TEP's water quality manager, told the group about the project's history.

The Southern Flow Corridor is around 550 acres of former farmland that was converted back into wetland functionality in the 2010s. Progress began in the early 2000s when the Oregon Watershed Enhancement Board (OWEB) purchased a several-hundred-acre farm near the site where the Tillamook, Trask and Wilson Rivers flow into Tillamook Bay.

Major flooding in 2007 led members of the local community to seek ways to reduce the severity of floods that periodically render Highway 101 north of downtown impassable. The possibility of returning the OWEB owned property to wetland functionality emerged and with the help of Oregon Solutions, a working group was formed to develop a plan for the project.

Preparation took the better part of a decade and included the purchase of additional farmland and land swaps with a neighboring property owner to increase the project's footprint to 550 acres before work began in 2016.

By 2017, crews had removed over five miles of levees from the

Skaar touts housing record in reelection campaign

WILL CHAPPELL
Headlight Editor

Tillamook County Commissioner Erin Skaar is running for reelection to position one on the Tillamook County board of commissioners as her first term draws to a close.

In an interview with the Headlight Herald, Skaar highlighted her record promoting solutions to address the county’s housing and homelessness crises, saying that she believes projects currently under way will have noticeable impacts.

“There’s a lot of pieces in the works and this work will have to continue and grow but right now we’re probably in the worst of it in my mind,” Skaar said. “I think we’re right on the cusp of being able to make the progress once we have the shelter.”

Skaar was elected to the board of commissioners in 2020, moving to the role after serving as executive director of Community Action Resource Enterprises (CARE) in Tillamook.

Even before being elected to the board, Skaar was involved in the formation of the Tillamook County housing commission, work which she has continued as commissioner.

Since 2019, Skaar said that the county has added more than 100 units of affordable housing and 25 units of housing affordable to residents making between 60% and 120% of the area’s median income. There are also an additional 150 units of affordable and workforce housing in the works in the county, with a multi-family housing grant program supported by short-term rental license fees helping to partially fund further development.

Skaar also pointed to her work on the homelessness issue in the county as a point of pride, especially as the work has been accomplished using outside funding. This was made possible when the county was selected for a pilot program, through which it received $1 million in state funding to create a coordinated homelessness response system.

A committee was formed consisting of representatives from the county government and each of the cities therein as well as community partners addressing homelessness. The system is housed at CARE and work is underway on building a micro-shelter facility in downtown Tillamook that is set to open in the coming months.

According to Skaar, being selected for the pilot program and forming the committee has also paved the way for additional funding, with $1.25 million recently awarded for a services center to complement the micro-shelters.

“So, now when I leave office there is a whole new structure, if you will, for services for those experiencing homelessness,” Skaar said, “and that was done with outside funding so it didn’t cost the county money and in fact it added money.”

Skaar said that she believes the county is at a nadir in terms of the homelessness crisis but that improvement is on the horizon once the shelter opens, noting that law enforcement officials will then be able to cite people for sleeping on sidewalks.

“Is it going to suddenly just be fixed? No. Will it get better? Will there be more opportunities? 100% and we’ll continue to build on those opportunities,” Skaar said, mentioning the possibility of future shelters in north and south county.

Skaar also said that she felt there was a misperception in the community that she was unwilling to hold homeless residents accountable for crimes they commit. “If they’re engaging in criminal behavior, they’re a criminal and they need to be treated for that criminal behavior,” Skaar said. “I would never say, ‘just because they’re homeless you can’t hold them accountable.’”

When asked about contentions by her opponents in the election that the county is devoting too many resources to serving those experiencing homelessness, Skaar pushed back, arguing that other services haven’t been impacted. “I would love to know which services we’re not providing because the work that we have done focusing on homelessness has been done through community partners,” Skaar said. “It’s been work that we at the county supported, have advocated for but it’s not anything that has taken away from any services that we offer to our constituents.”

Skaar also pushed back on opponents’ complaints about inefficiencies at the county’s building department. She said that she had heard similar complaints when coming into the office, leading to the hiring of an outside consultant to review the office’s practices for possible improvements.

That consultant recommended that the county institute processes to allow for electronic submission of plans and permit applications, which they did, but found that otherwise the office was operating efficiently for the number of staff it had.

Skaar said that there was not room in the budget for more staff members and noted that Oregon’s land use regulations and geological and conservational concerns in Tillamook County complicated and slowed the review process.

“We’re doing everything we can, including bringing in experts to review our systems so that we can find out is there something that is being done in Portland or Lincoln City or somewhere else that we can implement to make it go faster here,” Skaar said. “And the answer was no.”

Another issue that has come to the fore in this year’s campaign is promoting economic development in the county and increasing the county’s revenues.

Skaar noted that she sits on the board of the Columbia Pacific Economic Development District, which has helped her to identify lack of housing, childcare and basic infrastructure as the greatest barriers to economic development on the north coast.

Skaar pointed to the previously discussed work on housing and said that the county is working with local business partners on solutions for the dearth of childcare. She also noted that the county had directed funding it received through the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) to the City of Tillamook for a new wastewater management plan.

As for county revenues, Skaar sounded a less optimistic note, pointing to restrictions on the county government’s ability to implement new taxes or increase those that already exist.

Skaar mentioned that the board of county commissioners had recently began discussions about the possibility of increasing the county’s transient lodging tax (TLT) but said that it appeared they would need to seek voter approval for an increase. She said that she had reservations about an increase but ultimately believed that it would be necessary.

“Because we just did the short-term rental ordinance and the capping, I am slightly cautious about the increase of the TLT at this point. I think we have to do it; it’s the only tool that’s available to us, frankly,” Skaar said.

Oregon’s nonfarm payroll employment rises by 1,400

STAFF REPORT
Country Media, Inc.

Oregon’s seasonally adjusted nonfarm payroll employment rose by 1,400 jobs in March, following a revised gain of 2,800 jobs in February, according to the Oregon Employment Department.

in May 2023 is a sign of a loosening labor market. Another indicator of a loosening labor market was the rise in the number of Oregonians employed part time for economic reasons, which rose to 73,000 in March from a low of 48,200 in September 2022.

Monthly declines were largest in construction (-2,300 jobs); retail trade (-600); and manufacturing (-600). Hiring trends diverged during the first three months of the year.

Several major industries expanded by at least 1,500 jobs, while others contracted. Health care and social assistance continued its rapid growth of the past two years with gains totaling 3,300 jobs during January, February, and March.

Administrative and waste services added 2,700 jobs during those three months, which was an abrupt shift following this industry’s loss of 4,600 jobs during 2023. Government added 1,500 jobs so far this year as it continued its recovery and expansion of the past three years. The industry that dropped the most during the first three months of the year was construction, which dropped by 3,300 jobs, following a relatively flat year in 2023 when it gained only 900 jobs.

Meanwhile, accommodation and food services dropped 1,900 jobs so far this year, which nearly erased its gain of 2,000 jobs last year.

The rate

Oregon’s unemployment rate was 4.2% in both February and March. Its rise from a record low of 3.4%

Gains and losses

March’s gains were largest in professional and business services (+2,400 jobs); government (+1,000); and wholesale trade (+600).

Larson brings experience, deep community ties to assessor’s race

WILL CHAPPELL
Headlight Editor

After more than two decades in the Tillamook County Assessor’s Office, KaSandra Larson is running for the top position in this year’s election.

Larson told the Headlight Herald that she feels her extensive experience in the office combined with her attachment to the community make her a strong candidate for the position.

“I’m deeply rooted here and I’m committed to public service and I’m committed to continuing that support for our districts, our education, our public health, all of those,” Larson said, “that’s really the culmination of what we’re doing is money for supporting our vital districts. So, what you want is you want somebody that is here, that’s not gonna leave, not gonna move.”

Larson is a fourth generation Tillamook County native who graduated from Tillamook High School before going on to earn a Bachelor of Science in psychology from the University of Oregon.

Following her graduation, Larson returned to Tillamook County and landed in the county assessor’s office, starting as an office specialist and working her way up to a property appraiser reviewing other appraisers’ work.

After almost 15 years with the assessor’s office, Larson decided to make a major switch in 2017, accepting the position of chief deputy assessor and tax collector. In that role, Larson has managed the other side of the office’s duties, pivoting from appraisal to tax collection.

Larson said that she accepted the position and the accompanying training to enhance her experience with an eye towards an eventual run for assessor. “I thought, I want to do assessor but if I’m going to be assessor wouldn’t it be great to have both sides of the office,” Larson said.

In addition to continuing

her professional advancement, Larson said that she was also drawn to the opportunity to serve the community. She noted that her grandfather had served on the boards of the Tillamook People’s Utility District and Tillamook School District and that her father had served as chaplain for the sheriff’s office, inspiring her to give back as well.

“I come from this long line of community service, like people who serve the public and volunteer their services, so I guess you could say it’s in my blood in a way,” Larson said. “I’ve just seen all the generations give back to the community here and that’s really what the core of my campaign is about, public service.”

Larson serves on the boards of the Tillamook YMCA and the Tillamook Chamber of Commerce’s non-profit foundation and was previously on the board of the Tillamook United Way.

Larson is also the vice chair of the Oregon Association of County Tax Collectors and previously represented the office on the board of property tax appeals and the county at tax court proceedings.

Larson said that she has gained valuable management experience since switching roles in 2017 and that she feels her psychology degree would help to inform her management style if elected. She said that she would prioritize open communications and helping staff to see the importance of their work. “That’s what I would say is my management philosophy is to collaborate with your staff, honor their professionalism and find a deeper purpose as a team,” Larson said.

Larson also said that she would continue to push the office to adopt technological advances and that she wants to update its website to make information more accessible to residents.

Larson pledged that she would be accessible to constituents and offer well-informed, correct interpretations on assessment issues and said that she planned to stay in Tillamook for the long haul.

More progress needed on ocean protection, OSU scientists tell global conference

STEVE LUNDEBURG
Headlight Herald Guest Article

World governments and other leadership bodies are taking vital steps to protect the ocean but more progress is urgently needed, Oregon State University (OSU) scientists reported at the eighth Our Ocean Conference in Athens, April 17.

“Highly protected areas can safeguard against destructive activities such as high-impact fishing, mining and drilling, allowing marine life to recover and in many cases support nearby human communities,” OSU’s Kirsten Grorud-Colvert said. “We’re honored to be invited to share this evidence with world leaders – they are making decisions that directly affect the ocean and the people that depend on it.”

Grorud-Colvert and Jenna Sullivan-Stack, marine ecologists in the OSU College of Science, told global leaders from the public and private sectors that almost half – 3.7 million square miles – of the currently protected ocean areas stems from commitments made at earlier versions of the annual conference, first held in 2014, that was established by John Kerry when he was U.S. secretary of state.

The Oregon State scientists shared a road map for sustaining the momentum of ocean protection during the conference’s closing ceremony, highlighting the importance of accountability for delivering on the promises made at the conference.

Seventy-two percent of the commitments made since 2014 have been completed and real progress is happening through those completed promises, Sullivan-Stack said.

“Our research shows that if all of the current protected area commitments were completed, 4.1% of the ocean would be protected, including 1.2% categorized as either fully or highly protected against destructive activities,” she said. “If all promises across all venues were completed, more than 9.3% of the ocean would be protected, with more than one-third of that area fully or highly protected.”

Based on their findings, the OSU researchers outlined five recommendations for world leaders who have made or will make ocean protection commitments:

- Support progress so actions don’t stall on the road to completion.
- Ensure that protected areas are monitored, managed and collaborative so they can achieve intended results.
- Support an online commitment registry for the accurate tracking of progress on ocean commitments.
- Celebrate completed actions and success stories with a reporting at each Our Ocean Conference.

Use the success of the Our Ocean Conference to create momentum for a full range of meaningful, effective ocean actions including sustainable fisheries, reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, adequate financing, and vigilance to equity and justice issues.

“Progress is happening but more is needed,” Grorud-Colvert said. “Now is the time to focus on finishing these commitments and accelerating new actions to protect the ocean and stave off the destructive activities that threaten a thriving ocean and its benefits to people. The well-being of our planet depends on it.”

The Our Ocean Conference, held at a different location each year, brings together leaders of governments and industry, as well as youth and civil society, to tackle problems that threaten the health of the ocean. The goal of the conference is commitment to action that protects and restores ocean ecosystems and allows them to be used sustainably.

More than 190 new or expanded marine protected areas have been committed to since the conference started, Grorud-Colvert and Sullivan-Stack said. If they are implemented, with protections activated, they would cover more than 5.7 million square miles, or more than 4% of the ocean.

Since 2014, participating bodies in the Our Ocean Conference have made more than 2,100 conservation promises, the OSU researchers said. The pledges include efforts to reduce ocean pollution, thwart illegal fishing, support sustainable food from the sea and protect livelihoods.

More than 360 of the conservation pledges are to establish, fund or enhance marine protected areas. Total financial commitments exceed $4 billion, the scientists said.

“The magnitude of the Our Ocean commitments is commendable,” said Angelo Villagomez, senior fellow with Center for American Progress. “But the true measure of success will be for these top-down approaches to meet on-the-water efforts in a way that is both effective at conserving ocean life and also equitable and just for human communities.”

IN HONOR OF GOD, FLAG AND NATION:
I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all.

IS TILLAMOOK COUNTY BECOMING ERIN SKAAR’S ‘PRIVATE’ NON-PROFIT?

By Bruce Lovelin, Candidate for County Commission

In the last several months, I have had a great opportunity to talk to the citizens of Tillamook County. A common concern continues to arise – ‘homelessness, low-income housing and drug addiction’. As a 24-year business owner and resident, I asked myself ‘aren’t we more than that?’

Listening to hours of County Board meetings, examining budgets, participating in candidate debates and listening to hundreds of citizens, I have come to the realization:

- 1) Erin Skarr’s principal job experience is managing a non-profit, CARE for 10 years. She has said “Government is a lot like a non-profit”.
- 2) As County Commissioner she pushed for a 39-year lease of County property to CARE ($1 per year) to provide nightly lodging for the homeless.
- 3) As County Commissioner she pushed for a County Housing Advisory Committee which spent over $400,000 this year to subsidize low-income housing to private businesses.
- 4) As County Commissioner she adopted the largest deficit budget in Tillamook County history resulting in a $4,114,890 projected loss.
- 5) As County Commissioner she supported new taxes such as a County wide business tax, construction excise tax while attempting to balance the budget by defunding our Sheriff department. Thankfully these all failed.
- 6) She is now considering additional County taxes such as a prepared food tax, higher transient lodging tax and a vehicle registration fee for county residents.
- 7) The $125,000 annual salary (cost to Tillamook County taxpayers) that Erin receives will go up by 4 percent next year, and likely the year after.

The challenges are great for the County. School funding, public safety, rising food costs, economic stagnation - our county’s future is on the line. Personally, I don’t fault Erin as non-profit activities is all she knows so what else should the voters expect of her? But this singular focus is pushing our County to the economic brink of insolvency and a very bleak future.

Whether I am the answer here is your question? One thing is certain -- A vote for Erin will be more of the same. A vote for me will bring about change – a balance back to the things all of us need. Our future depends on you.

To read more about my approach that I will bring forward please go to www.Lovelin4Tillamook.com.

Respectfully submitted to the Citizens of Tillamook County.

Creating an environment for childhood resilience: The unseen influences

SARAH ERMER
Headlight Herald
Guest Article

What is your first memory of being stressed or upset? What was it about? Is it something that would upset you now, all these years later? Maybe, or maybe not. For me, it's the time my brother knocked over my Lincoln Log house because he wanted one of the pieces I was using (though he would probably tell you a different story).

We all face challenges—even kids. Dare I say, especially kids, as they are still developing the understanding and skills to navigate their world and interactions with others. We as humans are not born with executive function, or the complex ability to think about future consequences, regulate our emotions and impulses, or organize tasks. These are all things that we learn from the environment around us. Most people would probably recognize early interactions and relationships as things that help form a child's executive function. And they would be correct! The "serve and return" back-and-forth exchange of communication with caregivers is a necessary component in a child's ability to feel secure in the world and to know how to operate within it. Their executive function allows them to process new anxieties, building resilience. When a child is resilient, the inevitable challenges of life aren't quite as hard to manage.

So, you're raising a child. You're doing all the right things: the bedtime stories, the tummy time, the peek-a-boo. Your child is on the superhighway to mastering executive function! What else could possibly be done? Well, have you checked for lead in your home?

Like, the lead pipe from the board game Clue? The lead that infiltrated the water supply in Flint, Michigan in 2014? Yeah, that lead. You probably already know that lead is bad, but do you know why? Lead is a common and exceptionally potent neurotoxin that accumulates in bones and soft tissue. It damages the brain and central nervous system. In high enough doses, it can cause coma, convulsions, or death. Even in non-fatal cases of lead poisoning, children can be left with permanent brain damage: reduced IQ, reduced attention span, and increased antisocial behavior. In other words, lead can interfere with a child's development of executive function.

There is no "safe" level of lead exposure, and young children are particularly vulnerable. As a child plays and crawls on the floor, any lead dust or particles on the ground get on their hands. And, as is a child's nature, those hands go in their mouth. That easily, the dust of the lead paint on the walls is now in the child's system. This is compounded by the fact that children's bodies are far less efficient than adult bodies at filtering out lead.

The good news is that lead poisoning is preventable. You can easily find out if an item has lead in it with a home lead testing kit ordered online. Be aware of common sources of lead in the home. Lead-glazed ceramics, water pipes, imported spices and cosmetics, and children's toys are all common places lead has been found. About 24% of homes and buildings built before 1978 have lead paint. (Note: DO NOT try to sand or scrape off lead paint! This will release more lead dust into the air and can be extremely harmful. If you have lead paint and want to make your home safer, paint over the existing paint and be mindful to clean up any chipping or flaking.) Some jobs and hobbies can also come with lead exposure. Demolition work, manufacturing, renovation, welding, casting or soldering (fishing weights, bullets, stained glass) can all leave lead dust on clothing that is later tracked into the home. To avoid this, leave shoes and work clothes outdoors, wash them, and take a shower before going about your home life. Creating a physically safe environment for your child, one that is absent of lead and other dangers, gives them the capacity to focus on developing as resilient young humans.

Whew! Lead averted. Now that that's out of the way, we can go back to focusing on the bedtime stories and peek-a-boo...almost.

Lead isn't the only household toxin. Other common sources of accidental poisonings in children are household cleaning products, personal care/cosmetic products, and analgesics (pain relievers). About 35,000 children go to the emergency room every year after getting into medications and vitamins left within their reach. Those gummy vitamins sure do look like candy, right? Imagine how tempting such a treat is to small hands. Protect your children from accidental poisoning; keep medications, vitamins, and cleaning products up, away, and out of reach. When possible, keep them locked. Never refer to medicine as "candy" to get your child to take it, and teach them to never eat something that wasn't given to them by a trusted adult, even if it looks like candy.

Parents and caregivers: I know the list of everything you do for your kids is always growing, and it just grew a little more. Your hard work is recognized. All those veggies they don't want to eat, the emotional guidance, late nights, and disputes over Lincoln Logs can be exhausting unlike anything else. But remember this: the environment you are creating, the support you provide, and your watchful eye are sculpting your child's executive function, their whole health. And you're doing an amazing job.

Nehalem Bay Pharmacy now offers pick up lockers

Nehalem Bay Pharmacy has installed a secure automated Prescription Pick-up Locker that offers an option for individuals to pick up certain prescriptions without necessarily having to visit the pharmacy. The locker is located in the lobby of the Nehalem Bay Health Center.

This new program was made possible through a collaboration with Columbia Pacific Coordinated Care Organization (part of the CareOregon Family).

Media Opportunity: On Thursday, April 18, 2024 at 2 p.m., the Nehalem Bay Pharmacy Team and representatives from CareOregon will offer an opportunity for local media representatives to see a sample demonstration of the new system and learn more about it.

For patients and customers who want to learn more about the new locker, the Pharmacy Team will give a detailed demonstration/tutorial of the system on Thursday, May 9 at Noon. Patients and customers who are curious about the new system are invited to attend and see how the new system works.

Not all prescriptions will be available to pick up from the locker. Those patients who have prescriptions for which they need to show an ID will still need to visit the pharmacy. Over-the-counter items will also not be available via the locker.

For those patients and customers who are more comfortable visiting Nehalem Bay Pharmacy in person, the friendly staff team will still be available to fill prescriptions, help with over-the-counter purchases, and answer any questions.

For details on how the new Nehalem Bay Pharmacy Pick-up Locker works, visit: <https://www.nehalem-bayhealth.org/pharmacy-pick-up-locker>.

About this time each year I get desperate to be in the garden, doing anything, as long as the weather is nice. I used to work outside even in the cold and rain, but those days are long gone. Just can't physically handle that anymore. And, really, why should I? The chores will be there when the weather is nice. And on those lovely days when the sun is out and there is not much wind, what can be better than to get outside and accomplish something?

As regular readers might remember, I like working from a list as it seems to keep me on track. Otherwise, I would be flitting from one area to another and from one task to another, not managing to get much done. And the first thing I do to create that list is to take a walk in the garden with a tablet and pencil and jot down what needs to be done.

This is best done on a day when you have the time to devote to that long walk around your yard. Doesn't have to be sunny or even warm. I generally will do a "master list" that includes everything from picking up sticks to cutting tree branches and replacing pavers. I like being organized so after I devise the master list, I break it up into parts. The first parts include dividing the garden into areas and then listing the chores for each of those areas. For example: "Patio Garden: reset patio pavers, prune roses, prune maple tree, get out fountain, clean off benches and chairs." Then I would go to a second area: "Front Garden: weed out bindweed and bittercress, set out slug bait, prune maple tree, plant annuals, reset path pavers."

Because I have so many Japanese maples, pruning them will be on several area lists as will resetting pavers and setting out slug bait. But some areas will have specific chores that only apply to that area, like cutting off dead Phormium leaves or feeding the azalea after it blooms.

Once I have the master list made out (and I usually wind up putting extra things on it as the season progresses) and broken into areas, I can then break down those area lists into more manageable pieces. I know my limitations and if pruning the escallonia is on my Side Garden list, that will take a whole day. No sense putting anything else down to do on that day. Sometimes I find it helpful to put the daily lists on a calendar, but that only applies if the weather is consistently nice and that may not happen until June. At this point I try to prioritize tasks as to what needs to be addressed sooner rather than later.

As long as I am in the garden and making lists, I also include what changes need to be made this season. Perennials that fail to thrive may have to be moved or donated to a friend's garden where conditions may be more conducive to that plant. There is no room in the garden for plants that don't pull their weight. This opens new opportunities to either find a new plant in a nursery or move something from elsewhere in my garden to that place. Either way, it gives a fresh new look to the garden.

Speaking of looking for new plants, time is fast approaching for the annual Tillamook County Master Gardener Association's Plant Sale. Held this year at the Tillamook Fairgrounds' Horse Arena from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on May 4, this sale is always a must-shop for local gardeners. I know for a fact there will be lots of tomatoes in varieties that are chosen especially for the Oregon Coast because I have helped transplant those tomatoes into bigger pots. But there are lots more types of plants as well. Strawberries come to mind, but also some vegetables as well as vendors with native plants, succulents and the popular FFA hanging baskets. Also coming are a wide variety of vendors from the Sharpenator to art and glass mosaics. There will also be local Master Gardeners on-hand to answer questions and help with choosing just the right plants for you. The Master Gardeners also set up a "Potting Shed Rummage Sale" which features lightly used tools and gardening paraphernalia like decorative pots, hoses, yard art, trellis and so much more. You never know what you will find that you didn't know you needed. The Rummage Sale runs the same hours as the Plant Sale. Come early as the tomatoes tend to sell out quickly. Always a fun morning, rain or shine. Hope to see you there.

Legislator's Letter: An update from Rep. Cryus Javadi

REP. CRYUS JAVADI
Headlight Herald
Guest Column

The 2024 legislative session ended last month. I wrote about two competing Measure 110 reform bills in my previous column. By the time that column was published, things had already changed. That's a testament to how fast things move during 35-day short sessions, but now that it's over, I want to summarize the things we did, the wins, and the losses.

Firstly, I want to address the elephant in the room... Or should I say the elephant in the forest? The Oregon Board of Forestry voted to adopt a damaging Habitat Conservation Plan that will devastate the North Coast. With the Banks' Mill closure and several others around the state, we have already seen the impact on jobs. Funding for critical local services like schools, road maintenance, and law enforcement will be also cut.

If you have read my previous columns, you will know that I strongly advocated for alternatives that would have better balanced the economic realities and conservation. I introduced several pieces of legislation to mitigate the negative impacts on our community. I wrote letters to the Governor, I testified before the Board of Forestry. Each time those in power re-buffed me.

Now, the Jewell School District is suing the state over the negative impacts the HCP will cause. The district will see a 35% cut in its revenue, forcing teacher layoffs and program cuts. Even if the state were to backfill the lost revenue to the school district, according to the state funding formula, Jewell would still see a 17% decrease in revenue.

This highlights a critical issue with the HCP. I've heard some try to quell concerns about the HCP by saying the state will backfill our communities' lost revenue. Even if that's true, I seriously doubt whether it would ever be enough. What used to be up to the timber industry, would now be left up to 90 politicians and a Governor, each with their own political agendas. Of those 91 people, only 2 (myself and Senator Weber) represent those impacted: YOU.

Our jobs would radically shift toward lobbying the state for more money to backfill what they took from us. Instead of relying on politicians, I would much rather rely on hard-working men and women in our forests.

On the North Coast, we want to be self-reliant. We don't want to be begging others to meet our needs. We want to provide for ourselves. For a long time, our timberlands have helped us do that. We understand the importance of being good stewards of our natural resources and no one does it better than those who work in our forests daily. I still remain hopeful that there is a solution to this issue that will benefit our communities.

Now, back to the session.

We passed HB 4002, which will end Measure 110 as we know it. As I outlined before, significant differences existed between this bill and the bill I sponsored to reform Measure 110. Initially, I didn't feel that HB 4002 met the urgency of the moment. Luckily, major revisions were made to it, making it a lot better. I voted for it because it was a good step in the right direction, but more is still needed.

The housing conversation continued this session, and the Legislature passed another round of big funding for housing development: $370 million in total. The unique part of this bill, as opposed to past housing packages, was the authority it gave local governments to move their urban growth boundary (UGB) to accommodate more housing production if they meet certain requirements. Under the bill, most North Coast cities may be eligible to expand their UGB by up to 50 acres to build more housing. Cities with populations over 25,000 can expand their UGB by up to 100 acres.

Until now, we have done very little to give cities more land on which to build homes. That's partly due to our decades-old land use laws that have proven very

Trying to See: Help for victims of domestic violence

TRYING TO SEE

merslife@gmail.com

Someone once wrote that “It is with men on land as it is with fish in the sea. The big ones eat the little ones.” One example of that process is people who manipulate, verbally abuse, beat up or force sex on their partners. With some exceptions, it is most often men who do this to women. These kinds of men think they own their women and are entitled to control them in any manner that pleases themselves. The National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV) claims that one in three women have experienced some form of physical violence by an intimate partner. One in seven women have actually been injured in that process. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) claims that more than half of all women have experienced some kind of sexual violence during their lifetimes, and one in four women have suffered rape or attempted rape. Domestic abuse consultant and workshop leader Lundy Bancroft wrote the book, “Why Does He Do That?” Bancroft has worked with thousands of abusive men for over thirty years, and has mapped out their thought process and the destructive trail they leave behind them. Many come into his (most often court mandated) workshops and counseling process full of distortions and denials of their own responsibility. Disrespect for women is a universal trait they all share. According to Bancroft, abusive men come from all types of educational backgrounds and occupations, not just men with poor educations, boring jobs, and personal frustrations. He writes that “abusive men come from every personality type, arise from good childhoods and bad ones, are ‘macho’ men or gentle.” A man’s abusive behavior is not a product of his own “emotional injuries or deficits in his skills.” His behavior is learned from early experiences, from male role models, and social influences. Abusiveness is embedded in his value system. Long ago, I worked my way through college as a Portland police officer. I got a call one night about a violent domestic dispute in progress at an apartment close by OHSU. When I got there, the wife’s cheeks and one eye were all red. She screamed at me, crying that her husband had hit her several times, and that he had wrenched their baby away from her and purposely dropped the infant on the floor. I arrested him and called another officer to help the wife and infant get to the emergency room, which was only two blocks away at OHSU. I was surprised that the violent man, the husband and father, was a young resident surgeon working at OHSU. I was only twenty-two then, and getting daily lessons about human nature. Being physically bigger than their partner helps abusive men get their courage up, or they would not dare to be abusive. Being bigger also makes them feel they have the right to control; it helps them feel safe to attack. Like other low primates that suffer from a distorted thought process, they feel superior to the people they abuse, and believe their size gives them the right to dominate. They use various means to abuse, including put-downs and other verbal abuse, physical aggression, sexual mistreatment. Given the nature of their actions, the quality of their thinking is about the same as that of a lizard: unreflective, angry and indifferently cruel, verbally and/or physically violent. Bancroft says abusive men even humiliate their partner further, putting the blame on them for their own verbal and physical violence. These men often claim they are the real victim, that their partner’s behavior (arguing, acting independent, refusing to submit) initiated the abuser’s actions. When they abuse their partner, their angry behavior may seem to be out of control, but it is not. Their specific abusive behaviors are in a way “calibrated,” and well-calculated, at least in accord with their thinking habits. Power, domination, and self-interest are the keys to the abuser’s thinking. Love and respect are nowhere to be seen, and nowhere in the abuser’s thought process. Very often, abusers also manipulate their own family and friends to get their support and turn them against the abused partner. Abusers lie about their own cruelty, deny and distort it, turn it upside down. Often, to those not part of their abuse, these men seem kind, generous, even charming and of good humor. This presents a major obstacle to the abused partner: others do not see the abuse, so find it hard to believe abuse has happened, given what they think they know about the abusing man. For example, the young surgeon I mentioned above: he was probably believed by his family and colleagues and medical patients to be a great guy, a wise physician, and a tremendous success. If you are a victim of abuse, no amount of your abuser’s lies and self-justification can cover the pain and confusion you feel. If you want help to reclaim your right to live your life without fear, call Tides of Change in Tillamook at (503) 842-9486. You will be helped.

Merkley Monthly: Delivering federal dollars for Oregon’s critical community projects

JEFF MERKLEY
Headlight Herald
Guest Column

When I was an intern for Oregon Senator Mark Hatfield, I had a front row seat to see just how important it is for our state’s priorities and values to be represented on the powerful Appropriations Committee, which is responsible for funding the federal government. Now, as chair of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on the Interior and Environment, I’m working hard to continue Senator Hatfield’s legacy and ensure that Oregon has a strong voice in the nation’s spending decisions – including investing in vital projects that meet our state’s diverse needs, from building wildfire resiliency to boosting affordable housing. I call these investments “community-initiated projects” because Oregon communities identify their top priorities and I fight to get them funded. Community-initiated projects are effective because no one knows the needs of your community better than you, the folks who live and work in them every day. So, when you tell me which projects will help your communities most, I work hard to secure funding for as many of those projects as possible. Just this March, Congress approved 139 of these community-initiated projects in the fiscal year 2024 government funding bills – projects that invest in Oregon’s working families by funding improvements in housing, health care, and education, as well as critical infrastructure, like water supply and sanitation systems. To help address the housing crunch and ensure more families have access to a decent home, the city of North Bend will receive $4 million to build affordable housing for critically needed workers in education, public safety, and health care. And Community Action Resource Enterprises, Inc. (CARE) in Tillamook County will receive $500,000 to renovate a building to serve as the county’s first low-barrier navigation center for people experiencing homelessness, which will also include employment, support, and case management services. To help close health care gaps and save lives, $2 million will go to the Curry Health Network to build a new chemotherapy clinic at the hospital in Gold Beach so folks living with cancer don’t have to drive far outside the county to receive lifesaving treatments. And, in Lane County, the Behavioral Health Stabilization Center will receive $1.5 million to help realize its vision of providing immediate support to anyone in the county experiencing behavioral health crises, including substance abuse. It’s also critical to the health of our families to modernize our drinking and wastewater infrastructure. That’s why I pushed to secure nearly $1.9 million for the City of Astoria to replace a nearly 100-year-old cast-iron waterline with modern piping. And the City of Clatskanie will receive $3 million toward building a new wastewater treatment plant to replace their over 50-year-old plant that is experiencing structural and mechanical failures. To invest in the education and workforce of our coastal communities, $896,000 is going to Oregon Coast Community College and its partners to create a maritime workforce education pipeline for high-skilled, high-wage, in-demand jobs in the “Blue Economy”, like maritime construction and welding. These are just a few of the more than 475 community-initiated projects spanning all 36 Oregon counties that I’ve secured funding for over the last three years in partnership with Senator Wyden and Oregon’s representatives in the House. As the only member of the Oregon delegation on the Appropriations Committee, I’ll keep fighting to fund as many of these homegrown projects as possible.

FENCEPOSTS

Recently, City Councilor Mary McGinniss led a group of almost a dozen Rockaway Beach residents on a hike through the Jetty Creek Watershed. I joined, as did two members of the newly formed Sourcewater Protection Plan Development Advisory Committee, Lydia Hess and Sandra Johnson. Also joining us was Nancy Webster, co-founder (along with Councilor McGinniss) of North Coast Communities for Watershed Protection. The goal: to see for ourselves the state of the source of our drinking water, and to better understand the issues behind preserving it. We parked downstream from the city water processing plant, a few hundred yards east of where Highway 101 crosses Jetty Creek. The plant, as I have written before, received a $2-million-plus upgrade between 2011 and 2013, after logging operations in the upper portion of the watershed increased the flow of soil and organic material. Those upgrades included membrane filters and sand filters, which we were able to see in operation. My first impressions almost immediately after leaving the highway and climbing the gravel logging road into the watershed: this place is worth saving if only for its beauty. Huge stands of fir and hemlock climb the steep hills carved from what was once the ocean floor prior to the uplift that created the Coast Range. Trillium, moss, and mountain violet cling to the road cut; hundreds of feet below, Jetty Creek itself tumbles and ripples over its rocky bed, collecting the water from this enormous green bowl at the ocean’s edge.

Whether you live in Rockaway Beach full time, have a vacation getaway here, or are among the many visitors I’ve met in the Historic Chamber Caboose asking about our city, I feel safe in guessing that one of your favorite parts of a beach visit is the sound of the ocean. The sound of a mountain stream burbling and chuckling over a rugged layer of round stones, splashing and gurgling through the woodland that surrounds it, is like the ocean’s playful younger sibling, tumbling and stumbling, laughing and rushing to meet the limitless space of sound and surf, sea and sky. Yet as we ascended, we could see signs of the damage done to the landscape and the forest itself. Vast swaths of scrubby, short trees intermingled with the white stumps and broken pieces of the last clearcut, like the skeletons of the forest left behind to bleach in our inconstant sun. It is especially shocking to see this recovering clearcut where it abuts an area of larger trees, rising like the bristling hair on an angry dog. Beside the logging roads that led us up into the heights of the watershed, we could see new growths of fir, hemlock, and cedar, most around ten feet high and ten years old, replanted after the 2011 harvest. Red alder saplings, some barely up to our knees, some level with our heads, spring up at the verge of the roadway. Peering between the hemlock boughs, we saw the leathery green leaves and red buds of salal, a berry common to the coast and a familiar food source for the indigenous people. But these are not commercially viable crops to the timber industry, and therefore subject to removal. The most cost-effective way to do this is to spray an herbicide engineered to kill broadleaf plants, leaving the more valuable conifers to be taken when they reach maturity. It also simplifies clear-cutting on an industrial scale. In future articles, I’ll cover some of the issues around the damage clear-cutting causes, and the threats both to the forest itself and to our drinking water. In the meanwhile, if you would like to learn more about Jetty Creek and some of the steps under examination to preserve it for ourselves and our posterity, North Coast Communities for Watershed Protection announced its regular Last Thursday meeting series. The first is this Thursday, April 25, 6:30 p.m. at the St. Mary By the Sea parish hall, 275 S. Pacific Street in Rockaway Beach. You can learn more at their Web site, <https://healthywatershed.org>. In addition, the city’s Sourcewater Protection Plan Development Advisory Committee Meeting takes place on Monday, April 29, 2:00 p.m. at city hall, 276 Highway 101 South.

ROCKAWAY BEACH

restrictive over time. I am encouraged to see us trying something new to tackle our housing crisis beyond just spending more money on subsidies. Before I sign off, I want to mention the funding wins briefly. Every time you send a tax dollar to the state government, it’s spent on something. I am glad that some of your tax dollars were reinvested in the North Coast. Here are the examples of the projects that received funding in Tillamook County:

- $900,000 for Tillamook Family Counseling Center to purchase a transitional recovery home in Tillamook (SB 1530)
- $2 million for Nehalem Bay Health District for service expansions and upgrades to their Health and Senior Center in Wheeler (SB 5701)

- $2,709,000 for the City of Manzanita for water and storm infrastructure (SB 1530)
- $274,057 for the city of Tillamook for improvements to the Jones-Knudson affordable housing apartment complex (SB 1530)

As always, I welcome your feedback and input. It helps me better represent our community. Email me at Rep.CyrusJavadi@oregon-legislature.gov or call my office at 503-986-1432.

The Tillamook County Master Gardener Association’s annual plant and garden garage sale is coming right up. It will be on Saturday, May 4, at the Tillamook County Fairgrounds from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. The sale will offer a big variety of vegetables and flowers; gardening tools, accessories and decorative items from local vendors; and a garage sale with flowerpots and much more. If you have gardening questions, this is an excellent opportunity to come talk with the experts. Three Master Gardeners from Cape Meares will be participating in the event: Arla Ayers is the co-chair of the vendors, Marcell Ansorge will be cashiering, and Wendy Kunkel describes herself as being a “worker bee.” Arla tells me that all the plants in this year’s sale have been grown by Tillamook County Master Gardeners. Arla herself is growing lots of tomatoes, geraniums, ranunculus and onions, and Marcell is growing house plants for the sale. Thank goodness some among us have green thumbs. This is the Master Gardener Association’s only fundraiser for the year; please find time to check it out.

Many thanks to Ann and Steve Quinn for hosting another cozy coffeehouse at the Barbara Bennett Community Center, the last such gathering until fall. Close to 20 neighbors dropped in during the two- and one-half-hour event, filling up on good coffee and hot tea, delicious pastries ranging from blackberry coffee cake to banana walnut muffins to cinnamon coffee cake, and something nutritious from a fruit tray. People had a lot to talk about: low water pressure up on the hill, a lost short-haired German Shepherd dog, the closure of the dialysis center in Tillamook, past and upcoming vacations. Have a wonderful late spring/summer, neighbors, and we’ll see you on the beach.

Netarts Bay, now just a short hop over the cape via the Loop Road, is a great place for those of us in Cape Meares to go crabbing and clamming. In a sober safety reminder, however, a 54-year-old man from New Mexico died clamming in that bay on the evening of April 4, taken by surprise by an incoming tide. This is not the first fatal accident in that bay. Years ago, a Cape Meares resident took a group out crabbing in his boat. He placed crab pots near the jaws on an outgoing tide. When he went to retrieve them, his motor quit. He had no back-up motor or oars; his boat overturned and the people on board went into the water. Not everyone in his boat was wearing a life jacket; two lives were lost. Please, folks, remember to always:

- Check the tides before any outdoor activity in or near tidal waters;
- Wear your life jacket when out on the water;
- Have a back-up system on board your boat in the case of equipment malfunction; and
- Carry a cell phone in a waterproof case to make an emergency call.

Spring Chinook season is just around the corner. Get your angling license and salmon tag from the MyOD-FW app. Capt. Pete and I will see you on the water.

Starting off with a shoutout to Mats Jonsson, the long-time Loss Prevention Officer for the Port of Garibaldi. Happy retirement. Just being aware of all the measures he’s implemented around the port over the years made me not only feel safe, but excited to walk my toddlers along the shore.

That some of you might not know who I’m talking about is a testament to how well he excelled at his job. Don’t be a stranger, Mats.

If you haven’t read editor Chappell’s coverage (please do), our city manager is out and has been replaced in the interim by Liane Welch, who retired last year as Bay City’s City Manager and is currently their Mayor. It’s only for three months at her behest, but I hadn’t exhaled so peacefully in the last year as I have when I heard she signed on the dotted line. Any time with Liane is incredible time.

One of the more popular questions I’ve been receiving is: “How does one hire a city manager?” With at least 6 years of drama, shenanigans, litigation and other bits of reality-show zaniness impeding town progress, it’s a fair question to say the least.

I know enough to know the process has evolved over the years.

No, I was not on the search committee for the most-recent outgoing city manager. Around the same day Council President / City Manager Pro Tem Katie became Mayor Katie, our most recent city manager was starting in an interim role. In fact, I think it was the same, or very close to it.

I was on the panels to interview the really promising candidate around this time last year. For a refresher, this was the candidate we offered, accepted and then the candidate’s spouse got the rare double promotion to keep them from moving. So it goes.

I was on the second of two panels, which included myself, Rolland Sheldon (originally asked as a citizen before he came on the planning commission), Port of Garibaldi Manager Mike Saindon, Bay City’s then-Mayor David McCall, Garibaldi Fire & Rescue Deputy Chief Blake Paulsen, and Garibaldi Firefighter’s Association head Myra McCormick.

GARIBALDI
NATHAN “FINN” FINDLING

Initially, council goes through the stack of applications to sort out which candidates meet the criteria for interview. From what I’ve been a part of, we abide as best as we can to all the “equal opportunity” laws and the like – including military vets and others.

At this last year time, not only was the candidate I helped interview very promising, said candidate was the only candidate on the list.

From there, council determines a list of questions they want to ask. Those questions are compiled with a little legal help, making sure they abide by the layers of laws which restrict what the city can and can’t ask of a candidate. Taboo items typically include age, gender, race, medical stuff, etc. . .

Once the questions are determined, they begin scheduling interviews. In this case, one for the first panel and one for the second. On the second panel, the interview was conducted via Zoom.

Now, the trick with these interview questions is that the same questions must be asked of every candidate. To make sure this happens, panelists get a printed copy of the questions. And if a question is modified or added to the list in the first interview, it is written down and additional candidates are asked it as well.

Each question has a space to jot down notes and give a rating out of 5, 5 being the highest. I almost gave the candidate a “7” on one answer because his answer was better than anything I had seen in 5 years.

After thanking the candidate, the interview is concluded and panelists’ ratings are submitted to and compiled by the interview moderator.

From there, Council

Lastly, as to the future of the position, it’s a game of wait and see. Budget is taking immediate priority, to make sure we’re ready for the next fiscal year. Every day I hope Liane comes out of retirement and stays on full time, but that’s not fair to her nor to Bay City. But according to Mayor Katie, Liane has a few ideas to help us enhance our search. But we can’t ask for everything all at once, even from someone as good as her.

City), Regis (Stayton), and moved to Tillamook in 1973. His teams won several State championships in football and basketball, and district championships in baseball, as well as track and field. With the creation of Title IX, he started coaching girl’s teams and experienced continued success in that arena. After coaching he served as an official for many sports and events in the state of Oregon. Donald is survived by his three sons, Mike (Milwaukee, WI), James (Tillamook, OR), and Gary (Altadena, CA), his daughters-in-law, Susan Woolley, Nancy Burrell, grandchildren (Emily, Courtney, and John) and great granddaughter (Bonnie). meet the terms of Schempf’s contract and that his client was protected by whistleblower laws from retaliation by the vendors. In a meeting on April 9, the council voted to place Schempf on administrative leave, delaying a vote on his potential termination while negotiations continued between lawyers for the parties. At their regular monthly meeting on April 15, the council was presented with a separation agreement that had already been signed by Schempf for review and approval. Both the city’s attorney and a staffer at the city’s insurance carrier had reviewed and okayed the document prior to the meeting. Councilors voted unanimously to approve the agreement, with Schempf receiving three months’ pay or $28,791, in exchange for his agreement not to sue the city for any and all claims arising out of his employment. The city agreed not to comment in response to queries from potential future employers and will not be making contributions towards Schempf’s benefits. Following approval of the agreement, Mayor Katie Findling said that the council now needed to decide on how to proceed towards the goal of operating the city with a stable staff, balanced budgets and no outstanding audits. “How we are going to get there is the question we now face,” Findling said. Findling said that the city’s code allowed for the council to appoint a city employee to serve as city manager pro tem, assume the duties of the manager themselves while they searched for a replacement or to hire a pro tem manager. Findling said that the city’s staff did not have the time to take over the extra duties and voiced her unwillingness to take over the duties again, as she had last summer prior to Schempf’s arrival. Given those constraints, Findling said that she had been in contact with Bay City Mayor Liane Welch about taking over the position and the two had agreed to terms, pending council approval. Welch served until last summer as the city manager for Bay City, after previously working as the director of Tillamook County’s public works department. Welch assumed the mayoralty in Bay City in January of this year, following the resignation of Mayor pro tem Kathleen Baker. Welch appeared at the meeting and said that her goal was to help Garibaldi get to its next step and that a primary focus would be on helping the council recruit a full-time replacement. Numerous members of the public voiced their support for Welch and said that they wished she would accept the position for a longer period, before the council voted unanimously to approve her hiring. Welch began in the role on April 17, and will work 30-32 hours a week for the next three months at a rate of $55 an hour.

property and constructed new, smaller setback levies as well as tide gates on the, while also filling in irrigation ditches. The project was paid for with $3.5 million in funding from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, appropriated in response to the 2007 storm.

According to Foster, the project has slowed the flooding of Highway 101 by two hours during five-year flood events and sped subsidence in those storms up by the same amount.

Next, the group headed to a site adjoining the Tillamook River on Burton-Fraser Road, where TEP's habitat restoration project manager, Conrad Ely, discussed the group's hopes for the site.

The 90-acre farm that formerly operated at the site was purchased by the Tillamook Shooters Association after a flood gate failure rendered it unusable for agricultural purposes. After evaluating the hydrological situation on the property, the association determined that it would only make use of about 17 acres and sold the remainder to the North Coast Land Conservancy.

The conservancy is working with TEP and the county government on ways to return the property to wetland functionality, but currently Burton-Fraser Road serves as a levee between the property and the river.

According to Ely and Tillamook Public Works Director Chris Laity, the road is in failing condition and the best solution will be to replace it with an alternate alignment elsewhere before breaching it to return the property's wetland connectivity.

That solution would be extremely costly and TEP is applying for grants that would help to fund the project.

The group then headed to the Whiskey Creek Fish Hatchery, where they enjoyed lunch as well as a brief overview of the hatchery's work. Jerry Dove of the Tillamook Anglers described the history of his group, which runs the hatchery.

The Tillamook Anglers were formed in 1987 after Dove and others decided that they wanted to revive the moribund hatchery on Whiskey Creek near Netarts Bay. The anglers lease the hatchery from Oregon State University for $1 a year and have improved the property greatly since they took over, including with the addition of a caretaker's house and incubation and meeting rooms.

The hatchery is staffed by volunteers from the group when fish are present and is licensed to hatch 100,000 fish annually.

After eating lunch, the group was shown the site of a future project just upstream on Whiskey Creek from the hatchery where a series of weirs will be added to help chum salmon pass over a dam.

Finally, the group made its way to Sitka Sedge State Natural Area, just north of Tierra Del Mar.

There, Noelle Bacheller from the Oregon Parks and Recreation Department (OPRD) and Christer LaBrecque, another of TEP's habitat project restoration managers, discussed the project envisioned for the site.

OPRD purchased the 360-acre parcel in 2014, after the failure of a tide gate in the half-mile long dike on the property led to its unsuitability for agricultural purposes.

Since that time, OPRD has been working with area partners to develop a plan to restore the estuary function of a 70-acre portion of the property that is separated from Sand Lake by the dike.

Following the development of four possible plans and feedback from the community, OPRD is targeting the construction of a new setback dike south of the current dike, including a flood gate. After the new dike's completion, the old dike will be breached, with a bridge or causeway constructed to allow continued recreational access.

Like the Tillamook River project, completing the envisioned work at Sitka Sedge will carry a hefty price tag and TEP and OPRD are currently working to identify and apply for grants to support the project.

Five common plants to avoid if you have pets

ALICE ST. CLARE
OSU Master Gardener

We love our pets. We also love our beautiful coastal gardens. Sadly, sometimes, the most stunning things in our gardens can be toxic to our beloved pets. So, how do we protect our pets and still maintain a gorgeous landscape. Depending on your pets' needs and habits, we can eliminate many of the toxic plants they may come in contact with. Here are a few common plants to avoid.

First to consider is Narcissus (Daffodils). These pretty seasonal flowers brighten up an early spring garden. Many see them as a sign that wet stormy coastal weather is ending and warmer, drier days are upon us. However, even in small amounts, the flowers can cause symptoms of diarrhea and vomiting.

Many of us love rhubarb pie and the rhubarb plant grows well in coastal climates. The stalks produce malic acid which is beneficial for people with acne, fibromyalgia, dry skin, and fatigue. The leaves are a different story. Even in small amounts the leaves can be lethal. They can cause gastrointestinal distress, breathing problems, and internal bleeding.

The flowers from Digitalis (foxglove) contain cardiac glycosides used in modern medicine. Accidental ingestion can be fatal. Dizziness vomiting, irregular heartbeat, delirium, hallucinations, and death can occur if accidentally ingested.

Hemlock is another plant highly toxic to pets. The entire plant, especially the roots, are poisonous. They can be found growing wild along stream banks and ditches. Symptoms vary after ingestion, ranging from nausea, vomiting, and salivation to convulsions, coma and ultimately death.

Finally, Hedra (English Ivy) is a common culprit of poisoning. These evergreen woody vines are extremely invasive and can easily climb up trees, fences, and buildings. The berries of these plants look like blueberries but that is where the similarity ends. If eaten, they can cause burning in the mouth and throat and gastrointestinal distress.

Before discussing pet-safe plants there is one additional plant of concern. Locally, Creeping Buttercups grow prolifically. They are opportunistic and will grow anyway they can take root. Gone unaddressed they will completely take over a garden. It is important to take note of these especially because often they grow in lawns. Many domestic animals eat grass to aid in digestion. The fresh sap of this plant is highly irritating to skin and mucous membranes. If ingested it can cause gastrointestinal irritation, colic, diarrhea, nephritis and in severe cases, paralysis of the central nervous system. The best way to prevent the spread of these is to dig and pull them up by the roots before they go to seed.

Even though there are a number of plants of concern, not to worry, there are many plants and flowers that add beauty to a garden and maintain a safe environment for your pet. Consider planting a pet friendly lawn. You can purchase seeds from a variety of places that sell lawn seed advertised as pet safe and pet friendly. Careful research will help you decide which seed is right for your pet and the area where you live.

Also, there are many herbs that your pet might enjoy snacking on while they improve your landscape. Try planting herbs like sage, rosemary, thyme, dill, fennel or basil. They smell terrific, are a nice addition to dips and sauces, and your pets will also appreciate them.

Many annuals are colorful and safe for your pets. Among them are petunias, fuchsias, sunflowers, camellia, snapdragons, and nasturtiums. All these plants come in a variety of shades, shapes and colors. Because of our mild coastal temperatures, they often winter over, and we can enjoy them over again the next year.

There are also a variety of perennials that are equally gorgeous and pet friendly. They include dahlias, hollyhock, and black eyes susans. These will add the brilliance that makes every garden pop with color year after year.

There is much to consider when designing a pet friendly landscape. It is best to do thorough research before planting. There are a wide variety of choices to meet your and your pet's needs. If you need help determining what is safe and unsafe for your garden, please feel free to contact your local OSU extension office at 503-842-3433 or contact us through our web site at <https://extension.oregonstate.edu/tillamook>

You can also contact the Tillamook County Master Gardeners Association for help. Reach them through the OSU extension office, their website at <https://tillamookmastergardeners.com/> or find them on Facebook. There are many resources available to assist you in creating a beautiful and safe garden for you and your pet.
