Trail Markings Found By Searchers

Along this rugged switchback trail in the Santa Rita Mountains, searchers believe, there may have been a second group of missing men. The group, led by John L. Mead and two others, was last heard from at about 10 a.m. yesterday. The searchers have been trying to locate the missing men since then.

The trail is marked by small rocks and sticks, which are used by hikers to mark their way. The searchers believe that the second group of men may have followed a different trail or used a different marking system. The searchers have been trying to follow these markings to find the missing men.

The searchers have been using maps and GPS units to help them navigate the rugged terrain. They have also been using their own experience and knowledge of the area to guide them.

The searchers are not giving up hope and will continue to search until the missing men are found.
