

Marion Davies

in the Movie Star Paper Doll Series

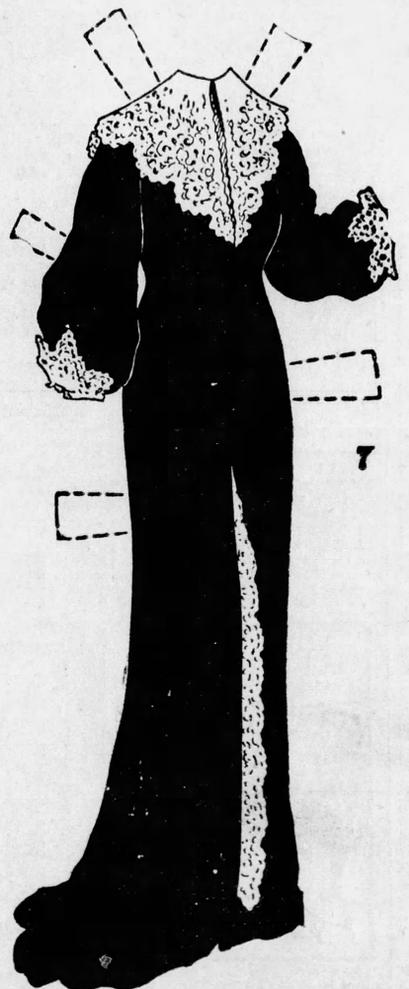

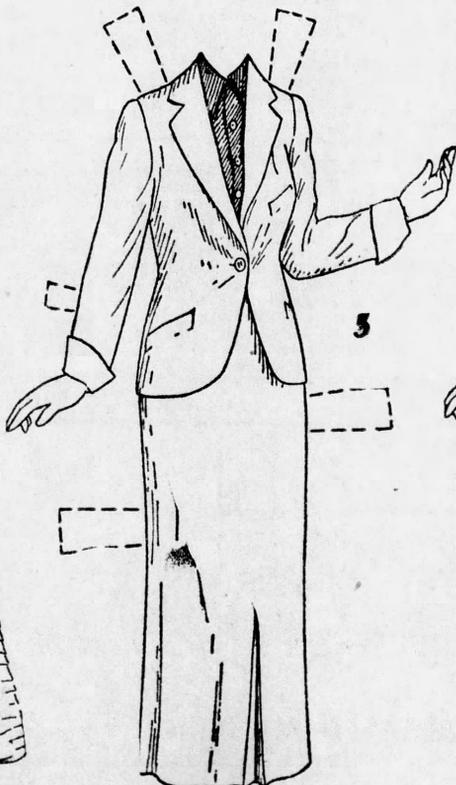

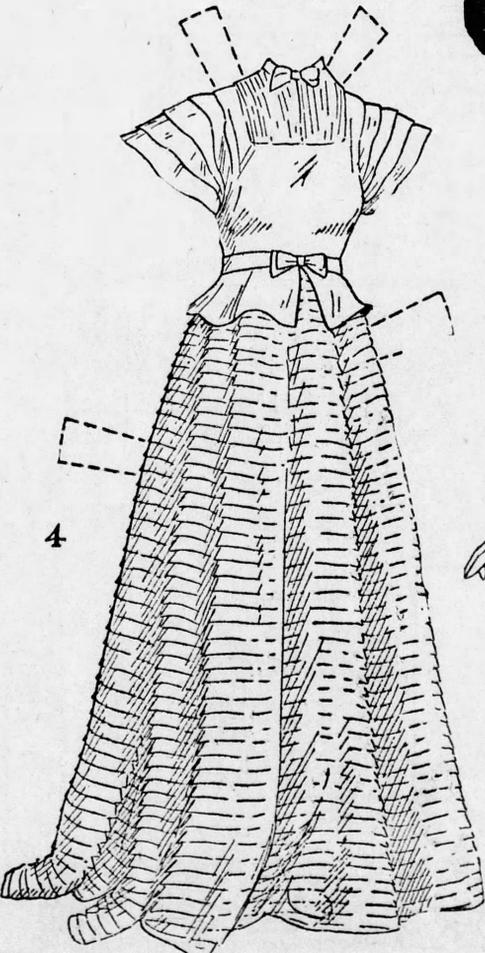

Marion Davies, Warner Bros.' striking blonde beauty, was born in Brooklyn. Her father was a judge of the Supreme Court, and she was educated in New York, specializing in dramatics. On leaving school, she posed for Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy and other famous artists. Then, of course, the stage claimed her and she was featured in Ziegfeld's Follies.

She was an instantaneous hit on the stage and almost immediately was besieged with screen offers. She has made many important pictures, among them being "When Knighthood was In Flower," "Beverly of Graustark," "Blondie of the Follies," "Going Hollywood," and her current success in "Page Miss Glory." This week Miss Davies is featured in the Movie Star Paper Doll series and is pictured with some of the beautiful clothes selected from her personal and screen wardrobe which are the acme of style and fashion.

1. The striking sport dress of white silk with its stitched pockets and ruffled jabot is from Marion Davies' personal wardrobe.

2. Another chic sport dress, worn by Marion Davies in "Page Miss Glory." It is of navy blue crepe with white pique collar and vest. The braid across the front gives it a decided military touch.

3. For fall, you would also love this fitted afternoon coat of black broadtail, banded in red fox.

4. A charming afternoon tea gown of pale heliotrope silk and net with dainty jacquet of matching material. The large garden hat completes the ensemble.

5. A strictly tailored fall coat-suit of distinctly mannish lines. The material is a new corded light gray tweed.

6. This exclusive swagger coat is another Hollywood style creation worn by Marion Davies. It is of white French flannel worn with triangular scarf.

7. An unusual hostess gown of black velvet with large collar and cuffs of Venetian lace.
