

Glen Canyon Dam key to our water supply

Congress authorized construction of Glen Canyon Dam in 1956, creating the Lake Powell reservoir. A major reason: To ensure the Colorado River's Upper Basin stores enough water in wet years to meet its legal obligation to deliver adequate supplies to the Lower Basin – including Arizona and California – even in dry years. With the lake shrinking, that system is at risk.

