Tempe Program In Engineering Field Approved

Regents, By 6 To 2 Vote, Okay Granting Of Master's Degrees By At Least 1961

TEMPE, Feb. 24 (AP)—A program leading to master's degrees in the engineering field at Arizona State College at Tempe by at least 1961 was approved Sunday by the Arizona Board of Regents.

A hot subject before the board for some time, the question was decided when a report of a special committee on degrees was approved by a vote of 6 to 2. Mrs. Evelyn Kirmse and Alex Jacome, both of Tucson, cast the negative votes.

The committee report authorizes the Tempe school to give master's degrees in the same area of field of engineering in which bachelor of science degrees now may be awarded. But they cannot be given until the undergraduate work has been accredited by the Engineering Council for Professional Development or the beginning of summer school in the year 1961, whichever occurs first.

The undergraduate courses, started recently at the college, cannot be accredited until the first class graduates.

Mrs. Kirmse first moved to table the report until the undergraduate courses are accredited and a survey for the need for such courses completed. In a prepared statement she contended that, "to offer graduate courses in any field before a firm and accepted foundation in undergraduate courses in that field has been established and been properly accredited is contrary to sound educational and professional practice and is not done in the stronger representative institutions."

She held that a student completing undergraduate courses which have not been accredited would find it virtually impossible to be accepted for graduate work in a recognized institution. In cases of transfers, she said a student might be denied credit for work in the unaccredited institution or might be accepted only conditionally.

She said the committee "nullified its own recommendation" when in the same paragraph it accepts the value of accreditation and recommends the establishment of graduate degree courses in 1961 whether or not accreditation has taken place

It became evident she was for her motion when Willam R. Mathews, also of Tucson and a member of the special committee, said he would have to go along with the committee report. Mathews said that if he thought giving master's degrees at Tempe would take anything away from the university he would "fight it with every means I have in the Legislature and elsewhere."

But he said this was not the case. "During the next ten years each of these three institutions will have more students than it can take care of. As a regent from Tucson who has his heart and soul in the University of Arizona and the City of Tucson, I feel I have to go along with the committee report."

At the same time, he said there is some question in his mind about the emphasis on scientific education.

"So much of their effort is devoted to killing and destruction that I sometimes wonder what is going to happen unless more emphasis is placed on graduates from the liberal arts schools," he said.

Dr. Grady Gammage, president of the college, said he thought adoption of the motion to table would be a "serious mistake."

"To say now that you can't look forward . . . when no date is set for entering the engineering field . . . would handicap us greatly," he told the board.

Jacome said he had reason to believe that the need for engineers throughout the nation was being vastly overemphasized "and that

Politics In Arizona

Incumbents' Victory Explodes Theories

By LESTER N. INSKEEP

The resounding victory scored by Tucson's incumbent Democratic administration in last Tuesday's primary election brought sighs of relief to many party members throughout the state who were worried that a dissident group opposing it might drive a wedge that could assure a Republican victory in the April 2 general election.

By defeating the three opposing council candidates, the administration proved that the official Democratic party organization has suffered no serious damage from the United Democratic Clubs, a group that in no way is connected with the Tucson or Pima County Democratic Central committees.

It also exploded the theory that opposition to Mayor Don Hummel's extensive annexation program has seriously hurt him and the ten councilmen whose offices are at stake this year.

The annexation will, of course, be raised during the general election campaign, but the Democrats will point to the fact that a program of substantial annexations was inaugurated by a former Republican administration.

Whether the United Democratic Clubs will succeed in its intention of trying to get the name of Alex Spross, a two-time loser for public office while a Republican, on the general election ballot as an independent candidate for mayor remains to be seen.

In view of the results of the Democratic primary, it would appear that the only practical result would be to hurt the administration, to the benefit of the Republican candidates for mayor and councilmen.

Running with Hummel in the general election will be Councilman F. T. Gibbings and William Wisdom. Also on the administration slate is Warren Walker, former chief city building inspector.

The Republican nominee for mayor is Gerald A. Swaner. His running-mates are William Aguirre, Peter Sowsie and Schuyler W. Lininger.

The Republicans, incidentally, have adopted a platform that includes a plank against repeal of the law limiting annual budget increases to 10 per cent.

At the same time the Republicans would provide full facilities to annexed areas and "restore to all areas of the city the services which have been reduced."

They did not explain how this can be accomplished without an act of the Legislature which at least would permit municipalities to add the value of annexed areas to the base on which the annual 10 per cent increase is computed.

The municipalities of the state long have contended that strict compliance with the budget limitation law seriously hampers their

Gale Rips Pacific Coast

Falling Trees Kill 3; Rains Cause Floods

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A wintry gale, roaring off the Pacific Ocean where winds exceeded 100 miles an hour, lashed the Pacific Coast over the weekend, disrupting trans-Pacific flights, blocking a main highway and posing one threat of a flood.

Wind caused three deaths in California and Oregon by crashing trees down on cars. A fallen pine tree killed a woman Friday night at Monterey, Calif. A 125-foot fir tree toppled onto a jeep near Grants Pass, Ore., Saturday, killing two foresters.

A heavy rain contributed to at least a half dozen traffic fatalities in California.

In eastern Oregon sudden, thawing winds sent melting snow rushing down the normally sluggish Powder River at Baker, flooding about 40 homes in a 10-block area.

In Washington, five inches of rain fell on the small logging community of Darrington at the western foot of the Cascade Mountains within 48 hours. Aberdeen, on Grays Harbor, reported better than 3½ in the same period. Power lines were knocked down and trees felled by the wind in the Grays Harbor area and along the east side of Puget Sound.

Along the northwest coast the wind howled in from the Pacific with furious force, reaching gusts of 158 miles per hour at Naselle, Wash., at the 2,200 foot level near the mouth of the Columbia River. Gusts of 110 miles per hour hit Mt. Hebo, Ore., at the 3,000 foot level near Tillamook. Then it dropped to 76 mph at sea level, after ripping a fishing trawler from its moorings at Garibaldi, Ore. U.S. Highway 30 was blocked by a slide about 28 miles east of Astoria, Ore., along with several minor highways.

In California, the Feather-Yuba rivers were expected to crest at 49 feet, 15 feet below the record set during the floods of December, 1955. No danger to inhabited areas was forecast.

More stormy weather was in prospect.

An influx of mild air warmed a vast area from the Rockies eastward to the middle Atlantic coast. Temperatures near 50 degrees were reported in Montana, and 50-degree readings were scattered through Illinois and the lower Ohio Valley.

Japan Picks New Prime Minister

TOKYO, Monday, Feb. 25 (AP)—The lower house of the diet (parliament) today elected Foreign Minister Nobusuke Kishi, Japan's seventh prime minister since World War II.

Kishi, who is 60, got 276 votes to 129 for Socialist Mosaburo Suzuki.

Kishi's election had been a certainty since executives of the government Liberal-Democratic party yesterday unanimously agreed on the foreign minister to succeed ailing Tanzan Ishibashi.

The switch in the government's conservative leadership was expected to bring little if any change in Japan's pro-western policy.

Korea C124 Transport Crash Toll Placed At 22; Arizonan Missing

SEOUL, South Korea, Feb. 24 (AP)—U.S. authorities fixed at 22 today the toll of dead and presumed dead in Friday's crash of a big Air Force transport plane. The craft, carrying 159 men, slammed down on a Han River sandbar while carrying a big contingent on a leave trip to Japan.

Army and Air Force officials resolved their conflicting figures and announced that 137 survivors have been accounted for. Twenty-eight of these still are hospitalized and two are reported in serious condition. Five bodies have been recovered.

Military officials say privately they have little hope any of the 17 missing are alive. Officially, the Army and Air Force say they are continuing to search for the 17 still unaccounted for."

An Iowa Army officer who survived the crash gave a possible hint of the fate of some of the missing.

Second Lt. Bennet S. Levin of Muscatine, Iowa, said the upper deck of the plane collapsed onto the bottom deck, pinning him under debris. He was unable to move.

"Finally," he said, "someone noticed me and helped loosen the debris so I could crawl out."

One Arizonan was listed by the Army as missing in the crash. He was Pfc. Gerald E. Jankroski, husband of Mrs. Dolores Jankroski of 853 11th St., Douglas.

An Army spokesman said salvage crews will try to move a large tank retriever, equipped with a powerful derrick, onto the sandbar Monday to pull the wreckage of the upper deck off the lower.

Low flying aircraft and ground crews, meanwhile, continued their search of the Han and its, icecaked banks in the belief that the flow of the 18-foot tides from the Yellow Sea may have washed bodies up or downstream from the crash site.

Salvage and rescue operations have been seriously hampered by tides which wash across the sandbar twice a day, flooding all but a tip of the tail of the burned out wreckage.

The 90-ton C124, an engine afire, came down less than five minutes after takeoff from Seoul's Kimpo airport.

Fiesta Comes To Whirling Finish

Jim Sayre, 24-year-old South Dakota rider, has his right hand trapped in the rigging when he was thrown from this wild broncing Brahman bull yesterday. Sayre fell to the ground after the bull spun him around twice. He was trampled once before the rodeo clown attracted the bull's attention with his glaring red polka-dot shirt. Sayre's Levi's were ripped and he was taken by ambulance to the hospital for treatment of knee abrasions. [Jack Sheaffer photo]

Sonny Davis Ropes Way To Tucson Rodeo Title

Strapping New Mexico Poke Wins $1,763.54

By CHARLES CAMPBELL

Sonny Davis, a strapping 23-year-old Kenna, N.M., roper, won $1763.54 and was named Tucson Rodeo's all-around cowboy champ yesterday as more than 10,000 persons jammed the fairgrounds grandstand for the fifth and final performance of the 1957 La Fiesta de los Vaqueros.

His money haul barely edged ahead of the 1956 champ, Dale Smith, Chandler, who collected $1718.75 prize money for calf roping victories.

Entry fees from 245 cowboys—the most ever—boosted individual cash purses to the highest in the 22 years' history of the local rodeo.

Ten cowboys each collected more than $800 and several others topped the $500 mark. Bob Henry, El Cajon, Calif., bulldogger, won $1,078.06 for a first-round win in steer wrestling, coupled with an added $300 plus for winning the bulldogging championship.

SONNY DAVIS

At least three riders were injured in the final two shows. Jim Howard, Beeklemas, Neb., was treated at St. Mary's Hospital for facial injuries suffered when a Brahman bull flipped him to the dust Saturday. He was released yesterday.

Treated at the Pima County Hospital emergency ward after the final show were Jim Sayre, 24, Rapid City, S.D., and George Gentner, Jr., 21, of El Monte, Calif. Both were released after treatment. Sayre narrowly escaped serious injury when he was thrown from a bucking Brahman and then gored twice. He was taken to the hospital in an ambulance and treated for knee abrasions. Gentner fractured a shoulder. He was tossed by a bronc.

Smith, the 29-year-old calf roping expert, was the only one of 14 former world's champions performing here to cash in on the big money. Others took home some of the go-around money but none, except Smith, won championships in any of the six events.

A slim California bareback rider, Harold Zwierlein, 20, Woodside, Calif., won $1121.73 a second with his riding skill. Zwierlein's eight-second ride on Sun Goose in the Saturday afternoon contest was judged best of 32 rides in that division and paid $909.88.

When not working rodeos, the California cowboy manages his father's shoestore near Palo Alto, Calif. The win, his third highest since turning pro in 1953, topped a crowd-pleasing ride of Eddie Quaid, the Oklahoma City rider who entered the Tucson rodeo fresh from winning all-around cowboy honors at the San Antonio Rodeo.

Secretary Hopes Solution Can Be Found

Meanwhile U.N. Preparing For Showdown Debate On Withdrawal From Gaza Strip

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.N. demands for withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Gaza strip and the Gulf of Aqaba headed for a sanctions showdown in the General Assembly Monday.

Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban conferred for more than three hours in Washington Sunday with Secretary of State Dulles and they apparently agreed on a new approach to the crisis.

Eban then scheduled a meeting with U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold in New York.

"It is hoped that out of these discussions a solution will be found consistent with the principles of the United Nations," said an Eban-Dulles statement.

The Israeli envoy flew back from Jerusalem with new instructions from his government. He declined to discuss reports that he brought back a plan to keep Egypt out of Gaza and guarantee Israel economic contact with the strip.

There were indications the United States still would go along with severe economic sanctions against Israel if necessary but wanted to slow down Arab moves for sweeping military and political sanctions.

Britain, France and other European countries opposed such penalties.

Diplomats interpreted the results of Sunday's long talk between Eban and Dulles as virtually certain to stall off any action by the United States in the United Nations on the sanctions issue. President Eisenhower and Dulles had decided at the end of last week that they would await Eban's return here before sending final instructions to Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge Jr.

Both the President and Dulles had created a public attitude of readiness to call on the U.N. to "exert pressure" on Israel if that country did not move in a constructive way toward withdrawing its troops. But they also had kept open the opportunity to stall on the issue a while longer if there was any chance of getting a settlement with Israel.

The assembly scheduled two sessions for Monday to debate a six-nation sanctions resolution. There was some talk the United States might offer an alternative weaker measure.

But late Sunday night the assembly's morning session was canceled after Lodge talked first with Dulles by telephone, then conferred with Hammarskjold. The U.N. would not say who asked for the cancellation.

Before meeting Eban, Dulles had an extraordinary 90-minute session with a bipartisan senatorial group.

Lyndon Johnson of Texas, the Senate Democratic leader, announced as spokesman for the group: "The administration seems to be exploring every possible means to bring about a settlement of this matter."

Lyndon Johnson of Texas, the Senate Democratic leader, announced as spokesman for the group: "The administration seems to be exploring every possible means to bring about a settlement of this matter."

Eban talked with his foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, in New York before seeing Dulles.

Mrs. Meir said later that she did not think other western countries would support U.N. sanctions against Israel. She added that Israel wouldn't back up from a sanctions threat.

In Jerusalem, an Israeli government spokesman said that if the U.N. votes sanctions, Israel cannot regard the U.N. as having any importance as an impartial mediator in the Middle East.

The U.S. attitude on sanctions promised to figure in the talks between President Eisenhower and France's Premier Guy Mollet, who left Paris for Washington Sunday night.

Izvestia, the Soviet government organ, charged the United States and Israel were in a "clandestine deal" to start a Middle East war to give the United States a chance to intervene and get control of the region's oil.

Pravda, the Communist party journal, said the Soviet Union would support Arab countries' moves in the U.N. for sanctions.

Peiping radio branded Eisenhower's plea to Israel to get out of Egypt as double dealing intended only to circumvent a Soviet "hands-off" peace program in the Middle East.

In Cairo, President Nasser of Egypt, King Saud of Saudi Arabia, King Hussein of Jordan, and President Kuwatly of Syria met to get from Saud a first-hand account of his talks with Eisenhower and consider the Middle East and Suez situation in the light of them.

5 Proposals Brought U.S. By Envoy

NEW YORK, Feb. 24 (AP)—United Nations sources said Sunday night that these were the five proposals Ambassador Abba Eban brought to the United States and presented to Secretary of State Dulles:

1. That Egypt agree to the passage of American merchant ships in the Gulf of Aqaba to serve as a guarantee Egypt would not close the waterway as she did the Suez Canal.

2. United States support at the United Nations of a Canadian proposal put forth recently by Foreign Secretary Lester Pearson. The proposal would place an international naval force in the Gulf of Aqaba.

3. Israel would agree to evacuate the Gaza Strip provided Egypt did not go in.

4. Israel to retain economic ties with the Gaza Strip.

5. The placing of a small U.N. police force in the Gaza Strip.

U.S. Jews Condemn Ike's Israel Stand

NEW YORK, Feb. 24 (AP)—President Eisenhower's stand on Israel was condemned Sunday by the national executive council of the Zionist Organization of America as "one-sided and short-sighted." The council also called the President's position "immoral."

U.N. Forgetting Egypt's Faults, Britishers Say

LONDON, Feb. 24 (AP)—British shipowners complained Sunday the U.N. seems to accept the view that Egypt was the "blameless party" in the Suez Canal dispute. They warned this attitude could lead to grave consequences.

The Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom, in an annual report, said the U.N. should keep in mind Egypt's "act in barring Israeli ships from the canal, in nationalizing the Suez Canal Co. and in subsequently blocking the canal."

The chamber, which represents all major British shipping companies, contended:

"If a final settlement is negotiated from the standpoint of forgetting Egypt's past actions, the outlook for the economy of Europe, and not Europe alone, is indeed bleak, and ill the endeavors that have been made in the past months to secure for the future full international usage of the canal will have been in vain."
