

A SANITARIUM.

The large number of indigent invalids who are constantly drifting into Arizona become a positive burden to the community, many of whom suffer for the ordinary necessities of life, suggest that there is a good opportunity for some of our philanthropic millionaires. This opportunity is that of establishing a sanitarium in this health imparting climate. We know of no one thing which is so much needed and which would result in so much good if properly conducted. This region is nature's sanitarium. It is of all others the most desirable climate for those afflicted with tuberculosis, for the germ of this dread disease can not survive in this atmosphere, especially in the summer months. Why do not some of our multi-millionaires build a monument of this character to their generosity? Why not establish a sanitarium village where people from all quarters of the United States can find a home while recuperating their health? Why not contribute some of their vast wealth in co-operating with nature in healing the sick? What benefaction could be of so much good as one like this? The Star proposes to agitate this proposition until it bears fruit. We must have a large sanitarium village established in this health preserving, health restoring basin where those stricken with sickness may come and find accommodations and relief.

The strength of organized labor was never so strong as now throughout the United States because it is organized on an intelligent basis. The machinists strike proves this fact. The giant trust systems which have recently come into existence is liable to add strength to these labor combinations by uniting with them the small manufacturers or that element of capital outside of the trusts. There is going to be some mighty big socialistic movements during the next five years such as the world has never known. The movements will be based on intelligence and for the general betterment of the masses. The trust system is forcing these movements, with rapid strides and the results are coming much sooner than the wisest statesmen and economists have predicted.
