

SunZia rising

Construction could begin next year on the SunZia Southwest Transmission Project, a 550-mile powerline from Central New Mexico to Southern Arizona. Several national environmental groups now support the project, but it has drawn opposition from some conservationists and residents along its route, especially in the Lower San Pedro River Valley east of Tucson.

