Potential desalination plant sites

Arizona, Sonora, numerous other entities and the International Boundary and Water Commission are looking at potential desalination plant sites along Sonora's Sea of Cortez coastline. Such a plant is a long way from being built, but many officials say desalination is an essential tool for responding to Arizona's chronic water problems. The various entities that are looking at desalination originally pursued five potential plant sites, but they have since removed what they call "Opportunities 3 and 4" from consideration.

SOURCE: Central Arizona Project, International Boundary and Water Commission and numerous other agencies and nongovernmental organizations. ARIZONA DAILY STAR