FROM STAFF OF COMBINED STAFF ASSOCIATED PRESS, BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, APRIL 12.—The morning April news which began almost at the start here for the British attack against the German trenches during the night, and the falling columns have been made extremely difficult. The storm is accompanied by snow and sleet and a gale that has blown from the north.

Notwithstanding these circumstances, the British attack continued under a heavy mist of fog, which permitted them to gain a foothold in the trench of the German line.

On the remainder of the front the work consisted largely of maintaining the line by the trenching of the British, which is being done in a very thorough manner.

The British attack and the German defense were both active, and it was a wonderful sight to watch the British attack on the morning of the 12th, and the German defense on the 13th.
