

By the numbers: University of Arizona vs. UA Global Campus

The University of Arizona and the University of Arizona Global Campus may have similar names and branding styles, but they are two distinct institutions accredited by two separate institutions. Up until about a year ago, UA Global, which is a nonprofit corporation, was known as the former for-profit Ashford University. Historically, Ashford, which will face trial Monday for a consumer protection lawsuit in California, has attracted more students from underrepresented backgrounds than many traditional four-year public universities. It's also struggled to deliver on student outcomes.

University of Arizona

33,715

Undergraduate students

86%

Undergraduates who are enrolled on a full-time schedule.

UA Global Campus/Ashford University

26,394

Undergraduate students

100%

Undergraduates who are enrolled on a full-time schedule.

Graduation rate

The share of students who graduated within 8 years of entering this school for the first time:

63%

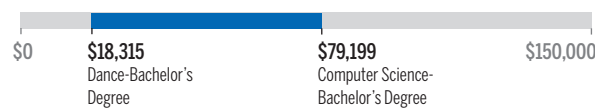

22%

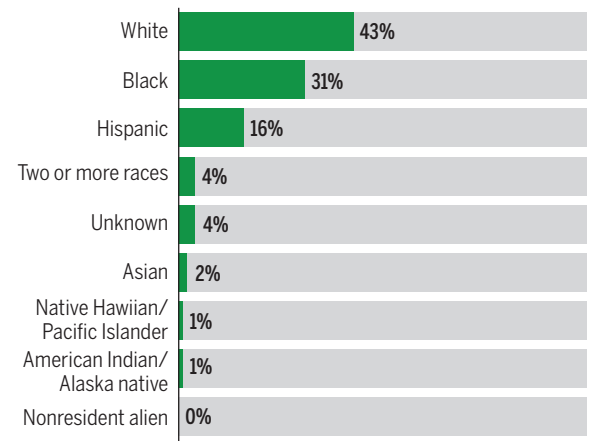

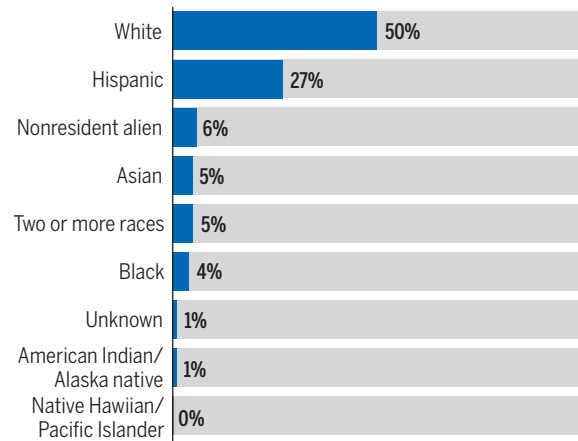

Salary after completing program of study*

Typical earnings in the second year after graduation with the range of highest and lowest median earnings for undergraduate and credential programs for which there is data:

Student body race/ethnicity

Student body socioeconomic diversity

The percentage of students who received an income-based federal Pell Grant intended for low-income students:

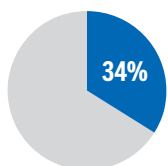

27%

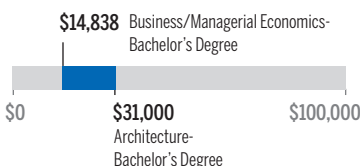

68%

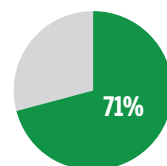

Students receiving federal loans

Median total debt after graduation

Students receiving federal loans

Median total debt after graduation

*Salary after completing depends on field of study

Total debt after graduation depends on field of study for undergraduate borrowers who complete college.

Source: U.S. Department of Education College Scorecard. According to the department's website, this data was last updated in August 2021. The department has information available only under the name Ashford University and does not have UA Global listed in its database.