Man Has Gas Book; Woman Has Bus Check; but Please, Lady, Stagger Your Riding!

By FLORENCE ANN RUEBSCH
Courier Staff Writer

The man used to say, "It's another woman driver." Now it's a different air with victory variation. Those women drivers can no longer be blamed by the sterner sex for making a left turn without arm-stretched warning, running a red light without flickering an eyelash, or bumping fenders with nonchalant defiance.

They're bussing it these days. It's the smart way of gearing in low toward the war-time shift of economy. Virtually drafted in defense of demerit, the setup in many homes is that the man of the house has almost complete control of the rare little A. coupons, thereby removing the family car from the realm of the "little woman."

Walks or Hops.
No more idle shopping tours or jaunts to the bridge club are likely when those precious gallons may be needed in the line of duty and daily bread (unsliced). So she hops or walks.

But herein the danger lies—those women who gloat with pride in their indomitable will for victory strides, are the objects of further criticism if they ride the bus at the busiest hour peaks in transportation.

"Because many women are now taking their place in industry and are employed in defense plants, more women ride the buses each day," Elmer R. Bitterly said, superintendent of the Waterloo, Cedar Falls & Northern Railway Co., points out. "That's why it is imperative that housewives, especially, observe staggering of traffic hours and ride the buses in non-rush hours to afford seating capacity for those who are employed."

Doubled in Rush Hours.
Doubling of service goes into effect during the busiest hours, Bitterly said, when additional buses are sent out from the terminal on every line in an effort to relieve congestion and assist workaday people to get home more promptly and more comfortably. Since the large plant shifts quit at 4 p. m. these buses are added, beginning at 3:30 p. m. and gradually increase into double swing until 6 p. m., the railway official said.

Since the morning traffic rush hour between 7 and 9 a. m. is too early for most housewives to go on shopping tours or pleasure larks, no difficulty is encountered during the morning traffic peak, he stated.

Pet peeve No. 1, for the average man, these days, is to board a bus only to find some housewife in the rear seat, jostling a sack of groceries and making thru the aisle-jammed standees to the exit.

"These women!" they mutter in disgust.

Has Its Good Features.
But it's an ill ODT order that tuffills no good, and even bussing has its pleasanties these days. In addition to becoming conditioned to pole-hanging, the short sprint to catch the 7:20 a. m. down and the 4:20 p. m. home is good for the figure, as well as reducing the breath.

Besides, bus-riding is like that tried and true remark about newspaper work—"You meet so many interesting people." It's not every day you can bump elbows with the bankers about town or forget slush and gloom while engaging in a friendly bit of conversation.

Even bussing back and forth to work these days can be glamorized—if you're lucky enough to catch that bus and squeeze your last finger in without squashing your packages in the folding door.

The Couriers are dated from 1892 thru 1894.

REQUIEM MASS TO BE SAID TUESDAY FOR 5 SULLIVANS

Archbishop F. J. L. Beckman Celebrant; Parents Will Be Home Friday.

Requiem mass for the five Sullivan brothers of Waterloo, missing in action with the United States navy since the cruiser Juneau sank Nov. 14 off the Solomon islands, will be said at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday in St. Mary's Catholic church, Rev. Fr. Raphael Grahl, pastor, announced yesterday.

Archbishop Francis J. L. Beckman of Dubuque will be the celebrant of the mass, Rev. Fr. Grahl said.

The brothers are George, Francis, Joseph, Madison and Albert, all members of St. Mary's parish. Tho the navy has listed them merely as missing, the saying of the requiem mass will indicate that their church has given them up for dead.

The boys' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Sullivan, 98 Adams street, who are touring war plants in the east under auspices of the navy's "Incenseless" division, apparently will not be here for the mass.

They are in New York today, will be in Bridgeport, Conn., tomorrow, and have several other speaking dates on their trip home.

Their daughter, Genevieve, said last night she had received word from them that they now expect to arrive in Waterloo next Friday.

Will Share Bereavement.
New York—(AP)—Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Sullivan, whose five navy sons have been missing since the cruiser Juneau was sunk, looked forward today to meeting a Bridgeport, Conn., family who have given four boys to their country.

On tour of eastern war plants, the Sullivans were to come to New York from Baltimore and Philadelphia, where they spent their twenty-ninth wedding anniversary urging workers to deliver more goods.

To Talk in Valve Plant.
Their trip to Bridgeport Monday will feature a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Rogers, whose four sons died in action in the U. S. navy, two of them on the Juneau. Their schedule also calls for a visit to the Jenkins Bros. valve manufacturing plant, where they will address the workers in midafternoon.

A dinner at which the Sullivans will be the guests of honor, and a radio broadcast will complete their scheduled appearances except for a return to the Jenkins plant at 9:30 p. m. to address the night shift workers.

Ask More Planes.
The couple Friday urged continued delivery of supplies to the navy, especially airplanes.

"If we had more planes, and more ships, out there in the Solomons," said Sullivan, "the cruiser Juneau wouldn't have been sunk and our boys wouldn't have been lost."

The Sullivans visited the U. S. S. Boise, the "one-ship navy" which sank six Japanese warships off the Solomons.

Ackley Girl Named Queen

No, that isn't Iowa grain surrounding this Iowa beauty who's making good in the big city.

Instead, it's just part of the "set" at Conover's studios in New York where Cyndie Mathewson—the former Joan Weber of Ackley, Ia.—is now a model.

Cyndie, or Joan, as you choose, reigned Friday night as queen of the annual New York Press Photographers' ball, chosen by the cameramen for her beauty, personality and intelligence.

As a girl, she left Ackley with her parents, went to school in California, attended the University of Southern California and then taught school for a while in San Diego.

Last summer, Cyndie—who's 21 and red-haired—went to New York for a visit, became a receptionist in offices of Secretary of the Navy Knox and finally wound up as a professional model at Conover's.

A month ago, she became the "Sweetheart of the Coast Guard," even tho she has a best beau in the marines, as a captain.

Grease will be taken to meat markets and hosiery to dry goods stores, Coverdale said. The women's group will be formed at once.

Mrs. Jones said there will be one woman in charge in each town and one in each town which has a mayor.

Tin cans brought here from other northeast Iowa counties will be shipped in freight cars out of here whenever enough of them is available to do so.

Silk hosiery is used in the manufacture of powder bags and nylon in parachute manufacture.

Black Hawk Summary.
A summary of Black Hawk county's industrial salvage activities during 1942 showed that 22,780 tons of steel and cast iron were collected; 13 tons of brass and copper; 91 tons of paper; 37 tons of rubber; 1,770 pounds of tags and burlap; 516 pounds of lead and zinc; two and a half tons of twine and string.
